NEUERTHELES thy sayntes had a very greate light (and the enemies herde their voyce, but they sawe not the figure of them.) And because they suffred not $\dot{y}$ same thinges, they magnified the: and they $\frac{t}{y}$ were rexed afore (because they were not hurte now) thanked the, and besought $\dot{y}$ (o God) $\dot{y}$ there might be a difference. Therfore had they 'a burnynge piler of fyre to lede them in the voknowne waye, thou gauest them the Sonne for a fre gift without eny hurte. Reason it was, that they shulde want light $\tau$ to be put in the preson of darcknes, which kepte thy childrē in captiuyte, by whom the vicorrupte light of the lawe of $\dot{y}$ worlde was for to be geuen. Whan they thought to slaye ${ }^{d}$ the babes of the righteous (one beinge laied out, and yet preserued to be leder suto the other) thou broughtest out the whole multitude of the children, 'and destroydest these in the mightie water. Of that night were oure fathers certified a fore, that they knowinge mito what oothes they had genen credèce, might be of good cheare. Thus thy people receaued $\mathfrak{y}$ health of the righteous, but the vngodly were destroied. For like as thou hast hurte oure enemies, so hast thou promoted vs whom thou calledest a fore. For the righteous children of the good men offired secretly, ordred the lawe of righteousnes vito vnite: $\dot{y}$ the iust shulde receaue good and euell in like maner, singinge prayses snto y father of all men. Agayne, there was herde an rnconuenient voyce of the enemies, т a piteous crie for childrē that were bewayled. The master and the seruaut were punyshed alike, the meane man and the kynge suffred in like maner. For they all together had imnumerable that dyed one death.
${ }^{f}$ Nether were y lyuinge sufficient to bury $\dot{y}$ deed, for in $y^{\circ}$ twincklinge of an eye, the noblest nacion of the was destroyed. As oft as God helped thé afore, yet wolde it not make the beleue : but in $\dot{y}$ destruccion of $\dot{y}$ first borne they knowleged, that it was $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ people of God. For whyle all thinges were still, $\widehat{x}$ whā $\mathfrak{y}$ night was in $\dot{y}$ myddest of hir

[^862]leourse, thy Almightie worde (o LORDE) leapte downe frō heauē out of thy royall trone, as a rough mà of warre, in $\mathfrak{y}$ myddest of $\hat{y}$ londe $\dot{y}$ was destroyed: a $\dot{y}$ sharpe swerde perfourmed thy straite cōmaundemēt, stālinge a fyllinge all thinges with death: yee it stode ypo y earth t reached whto the heanen. Then the sight of the euell dreames rexed them sodenly, and fearfulnesse eame rpon them ınawarres.

Then laye there one here, another there half deed half quyek, and shewed the cause of his death. For the visions that vexed the, shewed the these thinges afore: so that they were not ignoriunt, wherfore they perished.

The tentacion of death touched the rightcous also, and amonge the multitude in the wyldernesse there was insurreccion, but thy wrath endured not longe. For the fautlesse man wente in all the haist, ${ }^{a}$ and toke the battayll ypon him, brought forth the weape of his ministracion: euen prayer and $\dot{y}$ ceesours of recōeilinge, set himself agaynst $\hat{y}$ wrath, and so brought the misery to an ende: deelaringe therby, that he was thy seruaunt. For he ouereame not the multitude with bodely power, ner with weapés of might : but with the worde he subdued him that vexed him, puttinge the in remembraunce of the ooth a eouenant made vnto the fathers. For whan the deed were fallen downe by heapes one vpon another, he stode in the myddest, pacified the wrath, and parted y waye vnto the lyuynge. And why? 'in his longe garmèt was all the beuty, and in the foure rowes of the stones was the glory of the fathers grane, and thy maiesty was written in the crowne of his heade. Vnto these the destroyer gane place, and was afrayed of them: for it was only a tentacion worthy of wrath.

Ube rix. Cyapter.

A$s$ for the vngodly, the wrath came upo them without merey vnto the ende. For he knew before what shulde happe vnto them: how that (whan they had cossented to lett them go, and had sent them out with greate diligence) they wolde repente, a folowe yoon them. 'For whan they were yet mournynge and makinge lamētacion by the graues of the deed, they deuysed another foolishnes: so that they persecuted them in their flienge, [^863]whom they had east out afore with prayer. Worthy necessite also brought them vnto this ende, for they had cleane forgotten the thinges $\mathrm{y}^{\mathrm{y}}$ happened vnto them afore. But the thinge that was wantynge of their punyshment, was requysite so to be fulfilled vpon them with tormétes: that thy people might haue a maruelous passage thorow, and that these might fyode a strannge death.

Thē was enery creature fashioned agayne of the new acordinge to the wyll of their maker, obeyenge thy commaundementes, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ thy children might be kepte without hurte. For the cloude ouershadowed their tentes, a the drye earth appeared, where afore was water: so $\frac{t}{y}$ in the reed see there was a waye without impediment, and the greate depe becane a grene felde: where thorow all $\mathfrak{y}$ people wente that were defended with thy hande, seinge thy wonderous a maruelous workes. For as $\dot{y}$ horses, so were they fedd, $\tau$ leapte like lābes, praysing the (o LORDE) which haddest delyuered them. And why? they were yet myndefull of the thinges, that happened whyle they dwelt in the londe: how the grounde brought forth flyes in steade of catell, and how $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ ryuer scrauled with the multitude of frogges in steade of fyszshes.

But at the last they sawe a new ereacion of $\mathbb{C}$ byrdes, what tyme as they were ${ }^{d}$ disceaued with lust, and desyred delicate meates. For whan they were speakinge of their appetite, the quales came vp snto them from the see, and punyshmentes came vpon $y$ synners, not without the tokēs which came to passe afore by the vehemēce of $\dot{y}$ streames: for they suffred worthely acordinge to their wickednesses, they dealt so abhominably $\mathfrak{x}$ churlishly with straungers. Some receaued no vnknowne gestes, some brought the straungers in to bondage that dyd them good. Besyde all these thinges there were some, that not only receaued no stranngers with their wylles, but persecuted those also, ${ }^{e}$ and dyd the moch euell, that receaued the gladly. Therfore were they punyshed with blyndnesse, like as they that were couered with ${ }^{f}$ sodane darcknesse at the dores of the righteous: so ${ }^{t}$ euery one sought $y$ intraunce of his dore.

Thus the elementes turned in to them selues, like as whan one tune is chaunged vpon an instrument of musick, and yet all [^864]the residue kepe their melody: which maye easely be pereeaued, by the sight of the thinges that are come to passe. The drye lōde was turned in to a watery, a $\frac{\mathfrak{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ thinge that afore swamme in the water, wente now ypon the drye grounde. The fyre had power in the water (cotrary to his awne vertue) and the water forgatt his awne kynde to quench.

Agayne, the flammes of the noysome beastes hurte not the flesh of them that wète with them, nether melted they the yse, which els melteth lightly. In all thinges hast thou promoted thy people (o LORDE) and brought them to honoure: thou hast not desprsed them, but allwaye and in all places hast thou stonde by them.

MANY and greate mē haue deelared wyszdome vnto vs out of $\mathfrak{y}$ lawe, out of $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ prophetes $\mathbb{c}$ out of other that folowed thē. In the which thinges Israel ought to be commended, by the reason of doctrine and wiszdome: Therfore they that have it a reade it, shulde not onely the selues be wyse there thorow, but serue other also with teachinge and wrytinge.

After that my graundfather lesus had geuen diligent laboure to reade the lawe, the prophetes and other bokes that were left vs of oure fathers, and had wel exercised himself therin: he purposed also to wryte some thinge of wyszdome and good maners, to the intēt that they which were wyllinge to lerne and to be wyse, might haue the more viderstandinge, and be the more apte to lede a good conuersacion.

Wherfore I exorte you to receaue it louyngly, to reade it with diligence, and to take it in good worth: though oure wordes be not so eloquent as the famous oratours. For the thinge that is wryttin in the Hebrue tonge, soundeth not so well whan it is trāslated in to another speache. Not only this boke of myne, but also the lawe, the prophetes, and other bokes sounde farre other wyse, than they do, whan they are spoken in their awne language.

Now in the XXXVIII. yeare whan I came in to Egipte in the tyme of Ptolomy Euerges, and continued there all my life, I gat libertie to reade and wryte many good thinges. Wherfore I thought it good and necessary, to bestowe my diligence and trauayle to interprete this boke. ## The iij. Chapter.

THE children of wyszdome are a cōgregacion of the righteous, and their exercise is obedience and loue. Heare me youre father (o my deare children) and do there after, that ye maie be safe. ${ }^{5}$ For the LORDE wil haue the father honoured of the children, and loke what a mother commaūdeth hir children to do, he wil haue it kepte. Who so honoureth his father, his synnes shall be forgeue him : and he that honoureth his mother, is like one that gathereth treasure together. Who so honouretb his father, shal haue ioye of his owne children : a whan he maketh his prayer, he shal be herde. He that honoureth his father," shall haue a longe life: he that is obedient for $\dot{8}$ LORDES sake, his mother shal haue ioye of him.

He that feareth the LORDE, honoureth his father and mother, and doth them seruyce, as it were vnto the LORDE himself. Honoure thy father in dede, in worde and in all pacience, that thou mayest haue his blessinge: ${ }^{\prime}$ for the blessinge of $\dot{y}$ father buyldeth yp the houses of the children, but the mothers curse roteth out the foundacions. Reioyse not [^868]whan thy father is reproued, for it is no honoure vito the, but a shame. For the worshipe of a mans father is his awne worshipe, and where the father is without honoure, it is the dishonesty of the somne. My some, make moeh of thy father in his age, and greue him not as longe as he lyueth. And yf his voderstandinge fayle, haue pacience with him, a despyse him not in thy strength. For the good dede that thou shewest vito thy father, shall not be forgotten: and whan thou thy self wantest, it shall be rewarded the (and for thy mothers offence thou shalt be reeompensed with good, yee it shal be founded for the in righteousnes) and in the daye of trouble thou shalt be remembred: thy synnes also shall melt awaye, like as the yse in $y$ fayre warme wether.

He $\frac{t}{}$ forsaketh his father, shall come to shame: and he that defyeth his mother, is cursed of God. My sonne, perfourme thy workes with louynge mekenesse, so shalt thou be loued aboue other men. ${ }^{a}$ The greater thou art, the more hūble thy self (in all thinges) and thou shalt fynde fauoure in the sight of God. For greate power belongeth onely vito God, $\pi$ he is honoured of the lowly.
${ }^{\text {B }}$ Seke not out the thinges that are aboue thy eapacite, and seareh not the grounde of soch thinges as are to mightie for the: but loke what God hath commaunded the, ${ }^{\text {c }}$ thinke vpo that allwaye, and be not curious in many of * his workes. For it is not nedefull for the, to se with thine eyes, $\dot{y}$ thinges $\frac{t}{y}$ are secrete. Make not thou to moeh seareh in superfluons thinges, and be not eurious in many of his workes: for many thinges are shewed vito the allready, which be aboue ${ }^{\circ}$ capacite of men. The medlinge with soch hath begyled many a man, and tangled their wyttes in vanite. Now he that loueth parell, shal perish therin.
An harde herte shal fayre euell at $\mathfrak{y}$ last (am hert that goeth two wayes, shal not prospere: a he that is frowarde of hert, wyll ener be the worse and worse.) A wicked hert shall be lade with sorowes, and $\dot{f}$ vngodly simner wyll heape one synne rpon another. The conncell of the proude hath no health, for $\mathfrak{y}$ plante of syme shal be roted out in thē. The hert of him $\dot{y}$ hath voderstandinge, shal perceate hye thinges, and a good eare wil gladly

An hert that is wyse a hath vnderstādinge, wyl abstayne from synnes, and increase in the workes of righteousnes. ${ }^{d}$ Water quencheth burnynge fyre, a mercy reconcyleth symnes. God hath respecte vnto him $\frac{t}{y}$ is thankfull: he thinketh vpon him agaynst the tyme to come: so that whan he falleth, he shal fynde a stronge holde.

THRE whinges there are, $\frac{1}{y}$ my sprete fauoureth, "which be also a lowed before God and men: The vnyte of brethren, the lone of neghbours, and man and wye that agree well together. ${ }^{\text {a }}$
There thinges there be which my soul hateth, and I very abhorre the life of them: A pore man that is proude. A rich ma that is a lyar, ${ }^{,}$and an ode body that doteth and is retaste.

If thou hast gathered nothing in thy youth, what wylt thou fynde the in thine age? O how pleasaūt a thinge is it, what gray headed men are discrete, $\tau$ when the elders can gene good councell? O how coly a hinge is wyszdome vito aged men? see vnderstondinge and councell is a glorious thinge. The crowne of old men is to have moth experience, 匹 $\mathfrak{y}$ fare of God is their worshipe.
There be ix. hinges, which I have iudged in my hers to be happie, and the tenth will I tell forth vito men with my tone. A man $\dot{y}$ while he lyueth, hath ioye of his children, and seith y fall of his enemies. Well is him, that dwelleth ' with an houswife of vnderstōdinge, and that hath not fallen with his tone, [^892]and $\frac{t}{y}$ hath not bene faine to serue soch as are vnmete for lim. Wel is him, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ fyndeth a faithfull frende: a wel is him, which talketh of wiszdome to an eare $\stackrel{t}{y}$ heareth him. O how greate is he, $\frac{t}{y}$ fyndeth wyszdome $\tau$ knowlege? Yet is he not aboue him, that feareth the LORDE. The feare of God hath sett itself aboue all thinges. Blessed is ${ }^{\circ}$ man, vnto who it is graunted to haue the feare of God. Vnto whō shal he be lickened, $\frac{t}{y}$ kepeth it fast? The feare of God is the begynnynge of his loue, and the begynnynge of faith is to cleue fast monto it. The heuynes of the hert is all the punyshment, and the wickednes of a woman goeth aboue all. All punyshment a plage is nothinge in comparison of the plage of the hert, euẽ so all wickednes is nothinge to the wickednes of a woman.

What so euer happeneth mnto a man, is nothinge in comparison of it, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ his euell willers do vnto him: and all vengeaunce is nothinge to the vengeaunce of the enemye. There is not a more wicked heade then the heade of the serpet, and there is no wrath aboue $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ wrath of a woman. ${ }^{a}$ I wyl rather dwell with a lyon and dragon, then to kepe house with a wicked wyfe. The wickednesse of a woman chaungeth hir face, she shal moffell hir coūtenaunce as it were a Beer, a as a sack shall she shewe it amonge the neghbours. Hir husbande is brought to shame amōge his neghbours, © whā he heareth it, it maketh him to sighe. All wickednes is but litle to the wickednes of a woman, y porcion of the vngodly shal fall vpon her.

Like as to clymme up a sondy waye is to $\dot{y}$ fete of the aged, eue so is a wife full of wordes to a still quyete man. ${ }^{b}$ Loke not to narowly vpon the bewtye of a woman, lest thou be prouoked in desyre towarde her. The wrath of a woman is dishonoure and greate confucio. If a woman gett the mastrie, then is she contrary to hir huszbande. A wicked wife maketh a sory hert, an heuy countenaunce and a deed wounde. ${ }^{\text {c }}$ Of the woman came $\dot{y}$ begymnynge of synne, and thorow her we all are deed. Geue thy water no passage, no not a litle, nether geue a wicked woman hir will. If she walke not after thy hande, she shall confounde the in the sight of thy enemies. Cut her of then from thy flesh, that she do not allwaye abuse the.

HAPPIE is the man that hath a vertuous wyfe, for the nöbre of his yeares shalbe dubble. An honest woman maketh hir huszbande a ioyfull man, $s$ she shall fyll $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ yeares of his life in peace. A vertuous woman is a noble gift, which shalbe geven for a good porcion vnto soch as feare God. Whether a man be rich or poore, he maye have euer a mery hert, a a chearful countenaūce. There be thre thinges $\frac{ \pm}{y}$ my hert feareth, and my face is afrayed of the fourth. Treason in a cite, a sedicious people, and noysome tonges, all these are heuyer then the death. But whan one is gelous ouer his wife, it bryngeth payne and sorowe vito the hert: and a woman that telleth out all thinges, is a scourge of the tonge. Whan one hath an euell wife, it is euen as whan an volike pare of oxen must drawe together: he that getteth her, getteth a scorpion. ${ }^{\text {d }}$ A dronken woman is a greate plage, for she can not couer hir owne shame.

The whordome of a woman maye be knowne in the pryde of hir eyes and eyelyddes. " If thy daughter be not shamefast, holde her straitly, lest she abuse hirself thorow ouermoch liberte. Bewarre of all the dishonesty of hir eyes, and maruell not yf she do agaynst the. Lik as one that goeth by the waye and is thyrstie, so shall she open hir mouth, and drynke of euery nexte water that she mave gett.

By euery hedge shal she syt her downe, a ope hir quyuer against enery arowe. A louynge wyfe reioyseth hir huszbande, and fedeth his bones with hir wyszdome. A woman of few wordes is a gift of God, and to a well nurtured mynde maye nothinge be compared.

An honest and manerly woman is a gyft aboue other giftes, and there is no waight to be compared, vnto a mynde that can rule it self. Like as the Sonne whan it aryseth, is an ornament in the hye heauen of $\frac{e}{y}$ LORDE, so is a vertuous wife $\dot{y}$ bewtye of all hir house. Like as the cleare light is ypon $y$ holy cidelstick, so is the bewtye of the face ypō an honest body. There be two thinges ${ }^{\prime}$ grene my hert, and in the thirde is a displeasure come vpon me. When an experte man of warre suffreth scarsenes and pouerte, Whan men of voderstondinge and wyszdome are not set by: And whan one departeth from righteonsnes vito syme. THERE shall no euell happen vnto him that feareth God: but whan he is in tentacion, the LORDE shall delyuer him. A wyse man hateth not $\stackrel{f}{y}$ lawe, but an ypocryte is as a shyp in a raginge water. A man of vnderstondinge geueth credence rnto the lawe of God, and $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ lawe is faithfull unto him. Be sure of the matter, then talke therof: Be first wel instructe, the maiest thou geue answere. The hert of $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ foolish is like a cartwhele, and his thoughtes renne aboute like the axell tre. Like as a wylde horse that neyeth vnder euery one $\frac{t}{y}$ sytteth vpon him, so is it with a scornefull Trende. Why doth one daie excell another, seynge all the dayes of the yeare come of the Sonne? The wyszlome of the LORDE hath so parted them a sunder, and so hath he ordened the tymes and solempne feastes. Some of them hath he chosen and halowed before other dayes. And all men are made of the grounde, a out of the earth of Adam.

In the multitude of scyence hath $\dot{y}$ LORDE sundered them, and made their wayes of dyuerse fashions. Some of them hath he blessed, made moch of them, halowed them, a elaymed them to himself. But some of the hath he cursed, brought the lowe, © put the out of their estate. ${ }^{d}$ Like as $\dot{y}$ claye is in the potters hande, © all the ordrynge therof at his pleasure: so are men also in the hande of him y made the, so that he maye geue them as it liketh him best. Agaynst euell is good, and agaynst death is life: so is the vngodly agaynst soch as feare God. Beholde thus all the workes of the Hyest, © there are euer *two agaynst two, and one set agaynst another. I am awaked up last of all, as one that gathereth after in haruest. In the giftes of God and in his blessynge I am increased, © haue fylled my wyne presse, like a grape gatherer. 'Beholde, how I haue not laboured onely for my self, but for all soch as loue nurtoure and wyszdome.

Heare me $O$ ye greate men of the people, $₫$ harken with youre eares ye rulers of $\mathrm{y}_{\mathrm{g}}$ congregacion. Geue not thy sonne a wyfe, thy brother a frende power ouer the, whyle thou lyuest: a geue not awaye thy substaunce and good to another, lest it repent the, a thou be fayne to begg therfore thy self. As longe as thou lyuest a hast breth, let no man chaunge the: For better it is thy children to praye the, then $\frac{{ }_{y}^{c}}{y}$ thou shuldest be fayne to loke in their handes. In all thy workes be excellent, that thy honoure be neuer stained. At the tyme whan thou shalt ende thy dayes, and fynish thy life, distribute thine inheretaüce. The fodder, the whyppe, and the burden belongeth vnto the Asse : Meate, correccion, and worke vnto the seruaunt.

Yf thou set thy seruaunt to laboure, thou shalt fynde rest. But yf thou let him go ydel, he shal seke libertye. The yock and $\hat{y}$ whyppe bowe downe the neck, but tame thou thy euell seruaunt with bōdes a correccion. Sende him to laboure, that he go not ydle: For Idylnesse bryngeth moch euell. Sett him to worke, for that belongeth vnto him and becōmeth him well. If he be not obedient, bynde his fete: but do not to moch vnto him in anye wyse, I without discrecion do nothinge. ${ }^{\text {a }}$ If thou haue a (faithfull) seruant, let him be vnto the as thine owne soule, for in bloude hast thou gotten him. Yf thou have a seruaunt, holde him as thy self, for thou hast nede of him as of thy self. If thou intreatest him euell, and kepest him harde, and makest him to be proude, and to renne awaye from $\dot{f}$, thou canst not tell, what waye thou shalt seke him.

 NWYSE people begyle them selues with vayne and disceatfull hope, and fooles trust in dreames. Who so regardeth dreames, is like him that wil take holde of a shadowe, and folowe after the wynde: Euen so is it with the appearinges of dreames. Before the face is the licknes of a face. Who can be clensed of $\frac{8}{y}$ meleane? Or what treuth can be spoken of a lyar? Soythsayenge, witcheraft, sorcery, and dreaminge is but vanyte: like as whan a womā trauayleth with chylde, and hath many${ }^{4}$ Eccii. 7. c. ${ }^{\circ}$ Pro. 15. a. $\quad$ Deu. 24.c. fantasses in hir herte. Where as soch visions come not of God, set not thine herte vpon them : For dreames haue disceauce many a mā, and they fayled, that put their truste therin.

The lawe shalbe fulfilled without lyes, $\pi$ wyszdome is sufficient to a faithfull mouth. A wrse man $\frac{t}{y}$ is well instructe, viderstondeth moch: © he $\begin{gathered}t \\ y\end{gathered}$ hath good experiēce, can talke of wyszdome. He $\stackrel{t}{\mathrm{y}}$ hath no experiēce, knoweth litle: a he $\frac{t}{y}$ erreth, causeth moch wickednes. Whan I was yet in erroure, I lerned moch also: yee I was so lerned, that I coude not expresse it all, and came oft in parell of death therouer, tyll I was delyuered from it. Now I se, that they which feare God, haue the right sprete: for their hope stōdeth in him, that can helpe thē. Who so feareth the LORDE, stōdeth in awe of no man, and is not afrayed, for the LORDE is his hope and comforte.

Blessed is the soule of $\operatorname{him} \frac{t}{y}$ feareth the $\mathfrak{C}$ LORDE: In who putteth he his trust? who is his strēgth? For the eyes of the LORDE haue respecte vnto them, that loue him. He is their mightie proteccion, a strōge grounde: A defence for the heate, a refuge for the hote noone daye, a sucore for stomblynge, a an helpe for fallynge. He setteth vp the soule, and lighteneth y eyes: He geueth health life, and blessynge. He that geueth an offeringe of vnrighteous good, his offerynge is refused: and the scornefull dealinges of the mrighteous please not God. ${ }^{b}$ God hath no delyte in the offerynges of y vngodly, nether maye synne be reconcyled in the multitude of oblacions. Who so bryngeth an offerynge out of $y$ goodes of $\dot{y}$ poore, doth euē as one $\frac{\dot{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ kylleth $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ sonne before $\dot{y}$ fathers eyes.

The bred of the nedefull is the life of the poore: he $\frac{t}{y}$ defraudeth him therof, is a man, of bloude. Who so robbeth his neghboure of his lyuinge, doth as greate synne as though he slew him to death. 'He that defraudeth ${ }^{\circ} \mathrm{y}$ laborer of his hyre, is a bloude shedder. The yronsmyth in like maner bydeth by his stythie, a doth his diligence to laboure the yron. The vapoure of the fyre brenneth his flesh, and he must fight with the heate of the fornace. The noyse of the Hammer soundeth euer in his eares, and his eyes loke still vpon the thinge $\begin{aligned} & \text { y } \\ & \text { he maketh. }\end{aligned}$ He hath set his minde there vpon, that he wyll make out his worke, and therfore he watcheth, how he maie set it out, and brynge it to an ende.

He fashioneth the claye with his arme, and with his fete he tēpereth it. His hert ymagineth how he maye make it pleasaunt, a his diligence is to clense the ouen. All these hope in their hādes, a euery one thinketh to be connynge in his worke. $A$GREATE trauayle is created for all mé, and an heuy yock vpon all mens children, from the daye that they go out of their mothers wombe, tyll they be buried in (the earth) the mother of all thinges: namely, their thoughtes and ymaginacions, feare of the hert, councell, meditacions, longinge and desyre, the daye of death: from the hyest that sytteth vpon the glorious seate, vito the lowest and most symple vpon the earth: from him that is gorgiously arayed, and weereth a crowne, sutyll him that is but homely and symple clothed. There is nothinge but wrath, zele, fearfulnes, vnquietnes, and feare of death, rigorous anger and stryfe. And in the night whan one shulde rest and slepe 'pon his bedd, the slepe chaungeth his vnderstandinge and knowlege. A litle as nothinge is his rest, in $\dot{y}$ slepe as well as in the daye of laboure.

MOSES beloued of God and me, whose remembrannce is in hye prayse: 'him hath the LORDE made like in the glory of the sayntes, and magnified him so that the enemies stode in awe of him, thorow his wordes he dyd greate wonders. He made him greate in the sight of kynges, gaue him commaundement before his people, and shewed him his glorious power. He stablyshed him with faithfulnes and mekenes, ${ }^{d}$ and chose him out of all men. For he herde his voyce, and led him in the dareke cloude, ${ }^{\text {e }}$ and there he gaue him the commaundementes, yee the lawe of life and wyszdome, that he might teach lacob the couenaunt, and Israel his lawes.

He chose Aaron his brother also out of $\dot{y}$ trybe of Leui, ${ }^{f}$ exalted him, © made him soch like. An euerlastinge couenaunt made he with him, ${ }^{g}$ and gave him the presthode in the people. He made him glorious in bewtifull araye, and clothed him with the garment of honoure. He put perfecte ioye vpō him, and gyrded him with strength. He deckte him with syde clothes and a tunycle, with an ouerbody cote also and gyrdle. Rounde aboute made he him belles of golde, and that many: that whan he wente in, ${ }^{h}$ the sounde might be herde, that they might make a noyse in the Sanctuary, and geue the people warnynge. The holy garment was wrought a broderd with golde, yalow sylke and purple. And in the brestlappe there was a goodly worke,' wherin was fastened light and perfectnesse. Vpon $\hat{y}$ same also there was a worke fastened and set with costly precious stones, all bounde with golde: and this he brought in his mynistracion. The stones also were fastened for a remembraunce, after the twolue trybes of Israel. Vpon his mytre there was a phate of pure golde, a grauen ymage of holynes, a famous and noble worke, garnished, and pleasaunt to loke vpon. Therfore there stode vp certayne agaynst him, ${ }^{n}$ and had envye at him in the wyldernes: namely, they that were of Dathan a Abirams syde, and the furious congregacio of Chore. This the LORDE sawe, and it displeased him, and in his wrothfull indignacion were they consumed. A greate wonder did he yon them, and consumed them with the fyre. A prayer of Iesus the sonne of Sirac.

ITHANKE the O LORDE and kynge, and praise the 0 God my Sauioure. I wil yelde prayse vnto thy name: for thou art my defender and helper, $\mathbb{\text { hast preserued my }}$ body from destruceion, from ý snare of traytorous toges, and from the lippes that are occupied with leyes. Thou hast bene my helper, from soch as stode vp agaynst me, and hast delyuered me after the multitude of thy merey, and for thy holy names sake. Thou hast delyuered me from the roaringe of them, that prepared them selues to deuoure me, out of $\hat{y}$ handes of soch as sought after my life: from the multitude of them $\dot{y}$ troubled me, © wente aboute to set fyre vpon me on euery syde, so $\dot{y} \mathbf{l}$ am not brent in the myddest of the fyre: From the depe of hell, from an vncleane tōge, from lyenge wordes, from the wieked kynge, and from an vnrighteous tonge. My soule shal prayse y LORDE vnto death, for my life drew nye vnto hell.

They ē̄pased me rounde aboute on euery syde, $\tau$ there was no mā to helpe me. I loked aboute me, yf there were eny man that wolde socoure me: but there was none. Then thought I vpon thy mercy O LORDE, and vpon thy aetes that thou hast done euer of olde: namely, $\dot{y}$ thou delyuerest soch as putt their trust in the, and rydelest them out of $\dot{\mathbf{y}}$ handes of the Heithen. Thus lift I vp my prayer from the earth, and prayed for delyueraunce from death. I called ypon the LORDE my father, that he wolde not leaue me without helpe, in the daye of my trouble a in the tyme of the proude. I praysed thy name contynually, yeldinge honoure and thākes vnto it: and so my prayer was herde. Thou sauedest me from destruccion, and delyueredest me frō $\dot{y}$ vnrighteous tyme. Therfore wil I aknowlege and praise the, and magnifie $\dot{y}$ name of the LORDE.

Whà I was yet but yonge, or euer I wēte astraye, I desyred wyszdome openly in my prayer. I came therfore before the temple, a sought her vnto the last. Then florished she vnto me, as a grape that is soone rype. My hert reioysed in her, then wente my fote the right waye, yee from youth vp sought I after her: I bowed downe myne eare and receaued her. I founde me moch wyszdome, and prospered greatly in her. Therfore wyll I ascrybe the glory vnto him, that geueth me wyszdome: for I am aduysed to do therafter. thorow wiszdome, that I knowleged my foolishnes. I ordred my soule after her, she a I were one hert from the begyminge, and I founde her in clennesse. And therfore shal I not be forsaken.

My hert longed after her, and I gat a good treasure. Thorow her y LORDE hath geuen me a new tonge, wherwith I wil praise him. O come vinto me ye vn lerned, a dwell in $\dot{y}$ house of wyszdome: withdrawe not youre selues from her, but talke at comon of these thinges, for youre soules are very thirstie. I opened my mouth, and spake $4^{a}$ O come đ bye wyszdome without money, bowe downe youre neck vnder hir yock, and youre soule shall receaue wyszdome. # The stow of Eusimua,

THERE dwelt a man in Babilō, called Ioachim: $\stackrel{t}{y}$ toke a wife, whose name was Susamna, ( y doughter of Helchias) a very fayre woman, $\tau$ soch one as feared God. Hir father thir mother also were godly people, a taught their doughter acordinge to $\hat{y}$ lawe of Moses. Now Ioachim (hir huszbonde) was a greate rich man, a had a fayre orcharde ioyninge vinto his house. And to him resorted the Iewes comonly, because he was a man of reputacion amonge them. The same yeare were there made two iudges, soch as the LORDE speaketh of : All the wiekednesse of Babilon, cometh from $\dot{y}$ elders ( $\frac{t}{y}$ is) from $\dot{y}$ iudges, which seme to rule the people. These came offt to Ioachims house, a all soch as had eny thinge to do in the lawe, came thither into them.

Now when the people came agayne at after noone, Susanna wente in to hir huszbödes orcharde, to walke. The elders seynge this, that she wente in daylie a walked: they burned for lust to her, yee they were allmost out of their wittes, a cast downe their eyes, that they shulde not se heaué, ner remembre, ${ }^{\frac{t}{2}}$ God is a righteons iudge. For they were both wouded with the loue of her, nether durst one shewe another his grefe. And for shame, they durst not tell her their inordynate lust, $f$ they wolde fayne have had to do with her. Yet they layed wayte for her earnestly from daye to daye, that they might (at the leest) haue a sight of her. And the one sayde to $\hat{y}$ other: Vp, let vs go home, for it is dyner tyme. So they wente their waye from her.

When they returned agayne, they cane together, enqueringe out $\dot{y}$ matter betwixte them selues: yee the one tolde $\dot{y}$ other of his wieked lust. Thē apoynted they a tyme, whe they might take Susanna alone.

It happened also $\frac{\mathrm{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ they spyed out a conueniēt tyme, when she wente forth to walke (as hir maner was) a no body with her, but two maydès, "a thought to wash her self in the garden, for it was an hote season: And there was not one person there, excepte the two elders, $\frac{t}{y}$ had hyd them selues, to beholde her. So she sayde to hir maydens: go fet me oyle a sope, © shut the orcharde dore, $\frac{\mathfrak{t}}{\mathrm{y}} \mathrm{I}$ maye wash me. And they dyd as she bad them, a shut the oreharde dore, a wente out them selues at a backe dore, to fet the thinge $\stackrel{t}{y}$ she had cōmaunded: but Susanna knewe not, $\frac{\dot{y}}{\mathrm{y}} \dot{\mathrm{y}}$ elders laie there hyd within. Now when the maydens were gone forth, $\mathfrak{y}$ two elders gat them vp, a ranne vpon her, sayenge : now, the orcharde dores are shut, that no man can se vs: we have a lust vnto the, therfore consent vnto vs, and lye with vs.

If thou wilt not, we shall bringe a testimoniall agaynst the: that there was a yonge felowe with the, and that thou hast sent awaye thy maydens from the for the same cause. Susanna sighed, and sayde: Alas, I am in trouble on euery syde. Though I folowe youre mynde, it wyll be my death : and yf I consent not vnto you, I can not escape youre hondes. Wel, it is better for me, to fall in to youre hondes without the dede doinge, then to synne in the sight of the LORDE: and with that, she eried out with a loude voyce: the elders also eried out agaynst her.

Then ranne there one to the oreharde dore, a smote it open. Now when the seruauntes of the house herde $\dot{y}$ crie in $\dot{y}$ orcharde, ${ }^{3}$ Exo. 2. a. 2 Re. 11. a.
they ruszshed in at the back dore, to se what the matter was. So when the elders tolde them, the seruauntes were greatly ashamed, for why, there was neuer soch a reporte made of Susanna. On the norow after came the people to Ioachim hir houszbonde, and y two elders came also, full of myscheuous ymaginacions agaynst Susanna, to bringe her vnto death, t spake thus before the people: Sende for Susanna y daughter of Helchias, Ioachims wifc. And immediatly they sent for her. So she came with her father a mother, hir children a all hir kynrede. Now Susanna was a tender person, and maruelous fayre of face. Therfore the wicked men comaunded to take of the clothes from her face (for she was couered) $\frac{t}{y}$ at the leest, they might so be satisfied in hir beutie. Then hir fredes, yee $\llbracket$ all they ${ }_{y}^{t}$ knewe her, begāne to wepe.

These two elders stode vp in the myddest of the people, a layed their hondes vpon $\dot{y}$ heade of Susanna: which wepte, and loked vp towarde heauen, for hir herte had a sure trust in the LORDE. And the elders sayde: As we were walkinge in the orcharde alone, this woman came in with hir two maydees: whom she sent awaye from her, a sparred $\stackrel{g}{\mathrm{y}}$ orcharde dores. With that, a yonge felowe (which there was hyd) came vnto her, © laye with her. As for vs, we stode in a corner of the orcharde. And whē we sawe this wickednes, we rane to her: © perceaued, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ they had medled together. But we coude not holde him, for he was stronger then we: thus he opened ${ }^{\text {y }}$ dore, $\pi$ gat him awaye. Now whe we had take this womā, we axed her, what yoge felow this was: but she wolde not tell vs. This is $\mathfrak{y}$ matter, a we witnesses of $\dot{y}$ same.

The comon sorte beleued them, as those $\frac{t}{y}$ were the elders a iudges of the people, $I$ so they condemned her to death. Susanna cried out with a loude voyce, a sayde: O euerlastinge God, ${ }^{b}$ thou sercher of secretes, thou y knowest all thinges afore they come to passe : thou wotest, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ they haue borne false wytnes agaynst me: a beholde, I must dye, where as I neuer dyd eny soch thinges, as these men haue malicionsly inuented agaynst me. And $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE herde hir voyce. For whē she was led forth to death, $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ LORDE raised vp $\mathrm{y}^{\circ}$ sprete of a yoge childe, whose name was Daniel, which cried with a loude voice: ${ }^{\text {c }}$ I am clene frō this bloude. The all $\stackrel{\text { y }}{ }$ people turned thē towarde him, a saide: What meane these wordes, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ thou hast spoke? Daniel stode in $\mathrm{y}^{\circ}$ myddest of the , a sayde: Are ye soch fooles (O ye childrē of Israel) $\stackrel{t}{y}$ ye cā not discerne? Ye haue here condèned a daughter of Israel vnto death, and knowe not the trueth wherfore: Go syt on iudgment agayne, for they haue spoken false witnesse agaynst her.

Wherfore the people turned agayne in all the haist. And the elders (that is, the principall heades) sayde vnto him: come sit downe here amonge vs, and shewe vs this matter, seynge God hath geuen the as greate honoure, as an elder. And Daniel sayde vnto them: ${ }^{d}$ Put these two asyde one from another and then shal I heare them. When they were put a sunder one from another, he called one of them, and sayde vnto him : O thou olde canckerde carle, that hast vsed thy wickednesse so longe: thine vngracious dedes which thou hast done afore, are now come to light. For thou hast geuen false iudgmentes, thou hast oppressed the innocent, and letten the giltie go fre, where as yet the LORDE saieth : 'The imnocent and righteous se thou slaye not. Wel than, yf thou hast sene her, tel me, under what tre sawest thou them talkynge together? He answered: Vnder a Molbery tre. And Daniel sayde: very wel, Now thou leist euen von thine heade. Lo the messaunger of the LORDE hath receaued the sentence of him, to cut ${ }^{\mathrm{y}}$ in two.

Then put he him asyde, and called for the other, and sayde nnto him: $O$ thou sede of Canaan but not of Iuda: Fayrnesse hath disceaued the, and lust hath subuerted thine herte. Thus dealte ye afore with the daughters of Israel, and they (for feare) consented minto you: but the daughter of Iuda wolde not abyde youre wickednesse. Now tell me than, under what tre didest thou take them speakinge together? He answered : vader a pongranate tre. Then sayde Daniel vnto him: very wel, now thou leyst also euen spo thine heade. The messaunger of the LORDE stondeth waytinge with the swerde, to cut the in two, and to slaye you both.

With that, all the whole multitude gaue a greate shoute, and praysed God, which all-

[^918]waye delyuereth them $\dot{y}$ put their trust ${ }^{a}$ in him. And they came rpon the two elders, (whom Danicl had conuicte with their owne mouth: that they had geuen false witnesse) and dealte with them, ${ }^{\text {b }}$ euen likewyse as they wolde haue done with their neghbouresse: Yee they dyd acordinge to the lawe of Moses, and put them to death. Thus the innocent bloude was saued the same daye.

Thē Helchias t his wife praysed God for their daughter Susanna, with Ioachim hir huszbonde and all if kinrede: that there was no dishoneste founde in her. From that daye forth was Daniel had in greate reputacio in the sight of $\hat{y}$ people.

THERE was at Babilon an ymage, called Bel: and there were spent vpon him euery daye, xij. cakes, xl. shepe, and sixe greate pottes of wine. Him dyd the kynge worshipe himself, and went daylie to honoure him: but Daniel worshiped his owne God. And the kynge sayde vnto him: Why dost not thou worshipe Bel? he answered and sayde: ${ }^{a}$ Because I maye not worshipe thinges, that be made with hondes, but the lyuynge God, which made beauen and earth, and hath power vpon all flesh. The kynge sayde vnto him: thinkest thou not, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ Bel is a lyuynge God? Or seist thou not, how moch he eateth and drynketh euery daye? Daniel smyled, and sayde: O kynge, disceaue not thyselfe: This is but made of claye within, and of metall without, nether eateth he euer eny thinge. ${ }^{b}$ his prestes, and sayde vnto them: Yf ye tell me not who this is, that eateth vp these expenses, ye shal dye: But yf ye can certifie me, that Bel eateth them, then Daniel shall dye, ${ }^{c}$ for he hath spoken blasphemy agaynst Bel. And Daniel sayde vnto the kynge: let [^919]it so be, acordinge as thou hast sayde. The prestes of Bel were lxx. bessde their wyues and children. And the kynge wente with Daniel in to the temple of Bel. So Bels prestes sayde: Lo, we wil go out, a set thou ${ }^{\mathrm{y}}$ meate there ( O kynge) a poure in the wyne: then shutt the dore fast, and seale it with thine owne signet: and tomorow when thou commest in, yf thou fyndest not, that Bel hath eaten vp all, we wil suffre death: or els daniel, that hath lyed vpon vs. The prestes thought them selues sure ynough, for vnder.$\dot{y}$ altare they had made a preuy intraunce, त there wente they in euer, and ate vp what there was.

So when they were gone forth, the kynge set meates before Bel. Now Daniel had comaunded his seruauntes to bringe aszshes and these he siffted thorow out all the temple, that the kynge might se. Then wente they out, तs sparre the dore, sealinge it with $\hat{y}$ kynges signet, and so departed. In $\dot{y}$ night came the prestes with their wyues and children (as they were wonte to do) and ate and dronke vp all. In the mornynge be tymes at the breake of the daye, the kynge arose, $\sqrt{6}$

[^920]Daniel with him. And the kynge sayde: Daniel, are the seales whole yet? He answered: Yee (o kynge) they be whole. Now as soone as he had opened the dore, the kinge loked vato $\frac{8}{y}$ altare, and cried with a loude voyce: Greate art thou o Bel, and with the is no disceate. Then laughed Daniel, and helde the kynge, that he shulde not go in, and sayde: Beholde the pauement, mareke well, whose fotesteppes are these? The kynge sayde: I se the fotesteppes of men, women and chiłdren.

Therfore the kynge was angrie, and toke the prestes, with their wyues and childre, a they shewed him y preuy dores, where they came in, a ate rp soch thinges as were vpon ý altare. ${ }^{\text {a }}$ For the which cause f kynge slewe them, a delyuered Bel in to Daniels power, which destroyed him and his temple.

And in that same place there was a greate dragon, which they of Babilon worshipped. And $y$ हynge sayde vnto Daniel: sayest thou, $\dot{y}$ this is but a god of metall also? lo, he liueth, he eateth trinketh: so $\frac{\mathrm{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ thou cāst not saye, that he is no lyuinge God, therfore worshipe him. Daniel sayde wnto y kinge: I wil worshipe the LORDE my God, ${ }^{b}$ he is y true lyuynge God: as for this, he is not the God of life. But geue me leaue (o kynge) a I shal destroye this dragon without swearde or staff. The kynge sayde: I geue $y$ leaue. Then Daniel toke pitch, fatte, and hairic woll, and did seyth them together, and made lompes therof: this he put in y Dragos mouth, and so $\mathfrak{y}$ dragon barst in sonder: and Daniel sayde: lo, there is he whom ye worshipped.

When they of Babylon herde that, they toke greate indignacion, and gathered them together agaynst the kynge, sayenge: The kynge is become a Iewe also, he hath destroyed Bel, he hath slayne y Dragon, and put the prestes to death. So they came to $\frac{\mathrm{g}}{\mathrm{y}}$ kynge, 九 sayde: let us haue Daniel, or els we wil destroye the and thine house.

Now whan y kynge sawe, that they russhed in so sore vpon him, a that necessite constrained him, 'he deliuered Daniel vnto them: which cast him in to the lyons denne, where he [^921]was sixe dayes. In the denne there were seuen lyons, and they had geuen them euery daye two bodies and two shepe: which then were not geue them, that they might denoure Daniel.

There was in Iewry a prophet called Abacuc, which had made potage, and broken bred in a depe platter, and was goinge in to the felde, for to brynge it to $\hat{y}$ mowers. But the angell of the LORDE sayde vnto Abacue: go eary the meate that thou hast in to Babilon, vnto Daniel, which is in $\mathfrak{y}$ lyōs denne. And Abacuc sayde: LORDE, I neuer sawe Babilon: and as for the denne, I knowe it not. ${ }^{d}$ Then the angel of the LORDE toke him by the toppe, and bare him by the hayre of the heade, and (thorow a mightie wynde) set him in Babilon vpon the denne. And Abacuc cried, sayenge: O Daniel thou sernaunt of God, ${ }^{e}$ hane, take the breakfast, $\stackrel{+}{\dagger}$ God hath sent $\mathfrak{y}$. And Daniel saide: O God, hast thou thought vpon me? wel, thou neuer faylest them that loue the. So Daniel arose, a ate: and the angel of the LORDE set Abacuc in his owne place agayne immediatly.

Vpon the senenth daye, the kynge wente to bewepe Daniel: and whan he came to the denne, he loked in: and beholde, Daniel sat in the myddest of the lyons. Then cried $\stackrel{g}{y}$ kynge with a loude voyce, sayenge: Greate art thou, o LORDE God of Daniel :f a he drewe him out of the denne. As for those that were $\dot{y}$ cause of his destrucció, ${ }^{g}$ he dyd cast the in to the denne, and they were denoured in a moment before his face.

After this, wrote the kynge vato atl people, kynreddes and tunges, that dwelt in all countrees, sayenge : peace be multiplied with you. My commaundement is, in all the dominyon of my realme: that men feare and stonde in awe of Daniels God, ${ }^{h}$ for he is the lyuynge God, which endureth euer: his kyngdome abydeth mocorrupte, and his power is euerlastinge.' It is he that ean delyuer and saue: he doth wonders and maruefous workes in heauen and in earth, for he hath saued Daniel from the power of the Lyons.

, AFTER that Alexander the sonne of Philippe, kynge of Macedonia wente forth of the londe of Cethim, and slewe Darius kynge of the Persiās and Meedes: It happened, that he toke greate warres in honde, wanne very many stronge cities, and slew many kinges of $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ earth: goinge thorow to $\hat{y}$ endes of the worlde, and gettinge many spoyles of the people: In so moch, $\frac{t}{y}$ the worlde stode in greate awe of him, ${ }^{\text {a }}$ a therfore was he pronde in his herte. Now whè he had gathered a mightie strōge hoost, a subdued $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ lodes and people with their prynces, so that they became tributaries vnto hī: he fell sick. And whe he perceaued that he must nedes die, he called for his noble estates (which had bene brought up with him of children) ( parted his kyngdome amonge them, ${ }^{b}$ whyle he was yet alyue. So Alexāder raygned xij. yeare, and then dyed.

After his death fell the kyngdome vnto his prynces, and they optayned it euery one in his rowme, and cansed them selues to be crowned as kynges: and so dyd their childrē after them many yeares, a moch wickednesse increaced in the worlde. Out of these came $\stackrel{t}{y}$ vngracious rote, noble Antiochus ${ }^{\circ}$ y sonne of Antiochus the kynge (which had bene a pledge at Rome) a he raigned in ${ }^{\circ}$ Cxxxvij. yeare of the raigne of the Grekes. wicked men, which moued moch people with their coūcel, ${ }^{d}$ sayēge: Let vs go a make a couenaunt with the Heithen, $\frac{\mathrm{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ are rounde aboute vs: ${ }^{\text {c }}$ for sence we departed from them, we haue had moch sorow. So this deuyce pleased them well, and certayne of $y$ people toke vpon the for to go vnto $\mathfrak{y}$ kynge, which gaue them licence to do after the ordinaüce of the Heithen. ${ }^{f}$ Then set they vp an open scole (at lerusalem) of the lawes of the Heithē, and were nomore circumcised: but forsoke y holy Testamente, and ioyned them selues to $\hat{y}$ Heithé, ${ }^{g}$ a were cleane solde to do myschefe.

So when Antiochus beganne to be mightie in his kyngdome, he wente aboute to optayne $\stackrel{f}{y}$ londe of Egipte also, that he might have the dominion of two realmes. Vpon this [^922]entred he in to Egipte ${ }^{4}$ with a stronge hoost, with charettes, elephantes, horsmen t a greate nombre of shippes, and begame to warre agaynst Ptolomy the kynge of Egipte. But Ptolomy was afrayed of him, and fled: and many of his people were wounded to death. Thus Antiochus wāne many strōge cities, and toke awaye great good out of the londe of Egipte.

And after that Antiochus had smytten Egipte, he turned agayne in the Cxliij. yeare © wente towarde Israel,' and came vp to Ierusalem with a mightie people: and entred proudly into $\hat{y}$ Sanctuary, and toke awaye the golden altare, the candilsticke and all $\dot{y}$ ornametes therof: the table of the shewbred the pouringe vessel, the chargers, the golden spones, the vale, the crownes and golden apparel of the temple, and brake downe all. He toke also the syluer and golde, the precious Iewels, and the secrete treasures that he foüde. And when he had taken awaye alltogether, caused a greate murthur of men, and so fulfilled his malicious pryde, he departed in to his owne londe.

Thus there arose greate heuinesse and misery in all the londe of Israel. The prynces and the elders of the people mourned, the yoge men and the maydens were defyled, and the fayre beutye of women was chaunged: the brydegrome and the bryde toke them to mournynge: the londe and those that dwelt therin, was moued: for all the house of Iacab was brought to confucion.

After two yeares the kynge sent his chefe treasurer vnto the cities of Iuda, ${ }^{k}$ which came to Ierusalem with a greate multitude of people, speakige peaceable wordes vnto the , but all was disceate: for when they had geuen him credence, he fell sodely ypon the cite, and smote it sore, ' ${ }^{\text {and }}$ destroyed moch people of Israel. And when he had spoyled the cite, he set fyre on it, ${ }^{m}$ castinge downe houses and walles on euery syde. The women a their children toke they captiue, and led awaye their eatell. Then buylded they the castel of Dauid with a greate and thicke wall, and with mightie towres, and made it a stronge holde for them. Besyde all this they sett wicked people and vagodly men to kepe it, stoared it with weapens and vytales: gathered the goodes [^923]of lerusalen, and layed the $v p$ there: thus became it a theuysh castell.

And this was done to laye waite for the people that wente in to the Sanctuary, and for the eruell destruccion of Israel. Thus they shed imnocent bloude on euery syde of $\dot{y}$ Sanctuary, and defyled it: In so moch that the citesyns were fayne to departe, and the cite becaime an habitacion of stranngers, beynge desolate of hir owne sede, for hir owne natyues were fayne to leaue her. Hir Sāctuary was elene waisted, ${ }^{a}$ hir holy dayes were turned in to mournynge, hir Sabbathes were had in derision, and hir honoure brought to naught. Loke how greate hir glory was afore, so greate was hir confucion, and hir ioye turned in to sorow.

Autiochus also the kynge sent out a commission ${ }^{b}$ vnto all his kyngdome, that all the people shulde be onc. Then they left euery man his lawe, and all the Heithen agreed to the comaundement of kynge Antiochus: Yee many of the Israelites consented there vnto, offerynge vnto Idols, and defylinge the Sabbath. So the kynge Antiochus sent his messanngers with his commission vnto Ierusalem, and to all y cities of Iuda: that they shulde folowe ${ }^{\circ}$ lawes of the Heithē, and forbad ether burntofferynge, meatofferynge or peaceofferynge to be made in the temple of God, a that there shulde no Sabbath ner hye feast daye be kepte: but commaunded, that the Sanctuary and the holy people of Israel shulde be defyled.

He commaunded also that there shulde be set yp other altares, temples and Idols : to offre vp swynes flesh and other vaclene beastes: that men shulde leaue their children vacircumcised, to defyle their soules with all maner of vnclennesse a abhominacions: that they might so forget the lawe, and chauge all the holy ordinaunces of God: and that who so euer wolde not do acordynge to the commaundement of kynge Antiochus, shulde suffre death. In like maner commaunded he thorow out all his realme, and sett rulers ouer the people, for to compell them to do these thynges, commaundinge the cities of Iuda to do sacrifice vnto Idols.

Then wente the people vnto the Heithen by heapes, forsoke the lawe of the LORDE, ank committed moch euell in the londe: yee and chaced out the secrete Israelites, which had hyd them selues in corners and preuy places. The xv. daye of the moneth Casleu, df in the Cxlv. yeare, set kynge Antiochus an abhominable Idol of desolacion vpon the altare of God, and they buylded altares thorow out all the cities of Iuda on euery syde, before the dores of the houses, and in the stretes: where they brent incense, and dyd sacrifyce. And as for the bokes of the lawe of God, they brent them in the fyre, ${ }^{c}$ and rente them in peces. What so euer he was that had a boke of the Testament of the LORDE founde by hym, yee who so euer endeuored himself to kepe the lawe of the LORDE, the kynges commaundement was, $\frac{t}{y}$ they shulde put him to death. And thorow his auctorite they executed these thinges euery moneth, vpon the people of Israel that were founde in the cities.
${ }^{4}$ Tobi. 2. a. Amos 8. b. b2 Mac. 6. a.

The fyue and twentye daye of the moneth, ${ }^{d}$ what tyme as they dyd sacrifice vpon the altare (which stode in the steade of the altare of the LORDE) acordinge to the commaundement of kynge Antiochus, they put certayne women to death, which had caused their children to be circumcised: Not only that, but they hanged vp the children by the neckes thorow out all their houses, and slewe the circumcisers of them.

Yet were there many of the people of Israel, which determed in them selues, that they wolde not eate meleane thinges: but chose rather to suffre death, then to be defyled with vncleane meates. So because they wolde not breake the blessed lawe of God, they were cruelly slayne. And this greate tyranny increased very sore vpon the people of Israel.

And Matathias rente his clothes, he and his sonnes, and put sackeloth vpon them, a mourned very sore.

Then cane the men thither which were sent of kynge Antiochus, to compell soch as were Hed in to the cite of Modin, for to do sacrifice and to burne incense vnto Idols, and to forsake the lawe of God. So, many of the people of Israel consented and enclyned vato them, but Matathias and his sonnes remayned stedfast. Then spake the commissioners of kynge Antiochus, a sayde vnto Matathias: Thou art a noble man, of hye reputacion and greate in this cite, hauinge fayre children and brethren. Come thou therfore first, and fulfill the kynges commaundemēt, like as all the Heithen haue done, yee and $\dot{y}$ men of Iuda, and soch as remayne at Ierusalem : so shalt thou and thy children be in ${ }^{\circ}$ kynges fauoure, and emriched with golde, syluer and greate rewardes.

Matathias answered, and spake with a loude voyce: Though all nacions obeye the kynge Antiochus, and fall awaie euery man frō kepynge $y$ lawe of their fathers: though they consente to his commaundementes, yet wil I a my somes and my brethren, not fall from the lawe of oure fathers. God forbyd we shulde: that were not good for vs, that we shulde forsake the lawe and ordinaunces of God, ${ }^{b}$ and to agre vnto the commaundement of kyinge Antiochus. Therfore we will do no soch sacrifice, nether breake the statutes of oure lawe, to go another waye. And whē he had spoken these wordes, ${ }^{\text {c }}$ there came one of the Iewes, which openly in the sight of all, dyd sacrifice vnto the Idols vpon the aulter in the cite of Modin, acordinge to the kynges commaundement.

When Matathias sawe this, it greued him at the herte, so that his raynes shoke withall, and his wrath kindled for rery zele of the lawe. With that he gaue a szkippe forth, and kylled the Iewe besyde the aulter: Yee and slewe $\hat{y}$ kynges commissioner, that copelled him to do sacrifice, destroyed the aulter the same time: soch a zele had he vnto the lawe of God, like as ${ }^{d}$ Phinees dyd vnto Zambri the sonne of Salomi. And Matathias cried with a loude voyce thorow y cite, sayenge: Who so is feruent in the lawe, © wil kepe y couenaunt, let him folowe me. So he and his sonnes fled in to the mountaynes ${ }^{e}$ and left all that euer they had in ${ }^{8}$ cite. Many other godly men also departed in to the wyldernesse with their children, their wyues and their catell, and remayned there : for the tyranny increaced so sore vpon them.

Now when the kynges seruauntes and the hoost, which was at Ierusalem in the cite of Dauid herde, that certayne me had broken the kynges commaundement and were gone their waye to the wyldernesse in to secrete places, and that there were many departed after them: they folowed vpon them to fight agaynst them in the Sabbath daye, and sayde: Wyll ye yet rebell? Get you hence \& do the commaundement of kynge Antiochus, and ye shal lyue. They answered: We wil not go forth, nether wil we do the kinges comaundement, to defyle $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ Sabbath daye. $f$ Then beganne they to fight agaynst them neuerthelesse they gaue them none other answere, nether cast they one stone at them, ner made fast their preuy places, but sayde: We wil dye all in our imnocency, heauen a earth shal testifie with vs, that ye put vs to death wrongeously. Thus they fought agaynst them vpon the Sabbath, a slewe both men and catell, their wyues and their children, to the nombre of a thousande people.

When Matathias and his frendes herde this, they mourned for them right sore, and sayde one to another: Yf so be that we all do as oure brethrē haue done, and fight not for oure lyues a for oure lawes agaynst the Heithen: then shall they the sooner rote vs out of the earth. So they cocluded amonge theselues at the same tyme, sayenge: What soeuer he be that [^925]eömeth to make battayll with vs yon the Sabhath daye, we wyll fight agaynst him, $\pi$ not dye all, as oure brethren ${ }^{\mathrm{t}}$ were murthured so haynonsly. Voo this came the Synagoge of the lewes rnto the: stronge men of Istach, all soch as were feruent in the lawe. And all they that were fled for persecucion, came to helpe them, and to stonde by them: In so moch that they gathered an hoost of men, and slewe the wicked doers in their gelousy, and the vngodly men in their wrath. Some of the wicked fled wnto the Heithen, and escaped.

Thus Matathias and his frendes wente aboute, and destroyed the aulters, and circumcided the children, that had not yet receaned circumcision: as many as they founde within $\mathfrak{y}$ coostes of 1srael: and folowed mightely vpon the children of pryde, and this acte prospered in their hondes: In so moch, that they kepte the lawe agaynst the power of the Gentiles and the kynges, and gave not ouer their dominion vato wicked doers.

After this when the tyme drew on fast, that Matathias shulde dye, he sayde vnto his somes: Now is pryde and persecucion increased, now is the tyme of destruccion and wrathfull displeasure: Wherfore (o my sonnes) be ye feruent in the lawe, and ioperde youre lyues for the Testament of the fathers: call to remembraunce what actes oure fathers dyd in their tyme, so shall ye receaue greate honoure and an euerlastinge name.

Remembre Abraham, ${ }^{\text {a }}$ was not he founde faithfull in tentacion, and it was reckened vnto him for righteousnesse? Joseph in tyme of his trouble kepte the commaundement, and was made a lorde of Egipte. Phinees oure father was so feruent for the honoure of God, that he ${ }^{b}$ optayned the couenañt of an euerlastinge presthode. Iosue for fulfillinge the worde of God, was made the captayne of 1 s rael. ${ }^{\text {' Caleb bare recorde before the cōgre- }}$ gacion, and receaued an heretage. ${ }^{d}$ Dauid also in his mercifull kyndnesse, optayned the trone of an euerlastinge kyngdome. ${ }^{\text {e }}$ Elias beynge gelons and feruent in the lawe, was taken yp in to heauē. fHananias, Asarias and Misael remayned stedfast in faith, and were [^926]delyuered out of the fyre. In like maner ${ }^{2}$ Daniel beynge mgiltie, was saued from the mouth of the Lyons.

And thus ye maye considre thorów out all ages sens the worlde beganne, ${ }^{h}$ that who so euer put their trust in God, were not ouer come. ' Feare not ye then the wordes of an vngodly man, for his glory is but donge and wormes: to daye is he set vp, and to morow is he gone: for he is turned in to earth, and his memoriall is come to naught. Wherfore (o my sonnes) take good hertes vnto you, and quyte youre selues like men in the lawe: for yf ye do the thinges that are commaunded you in the lawe of the LORDE youre God, ye shal optaine greate honoure therin.

And beholde, I knowe that youre brother Symon is a man of wyszdome: se that ye geue eare vnto him allwaye, he shall be a father snto you. As for ludas Machabeus, he hath euer bene mightie and stroge from his youth vp : let him be youre captayne, and ordre the battayll of y people: Thus shall ye brynge vnto you all those that fauoure the lawe, and se that ye auenge the wronge of youre people, and recompence the Heithen agayne, and applie youre selues whole to the commaundement of the lawe. So be gaue them his blessinge, and was layed by his fathers: and dyed in the Cxlyj. yeare at Modin, where his sonnes buried him in his fathers sepulcre, © all lsrael made greate lamentacion for him.

Thy iij. ©fapter.

THEN stode vp Iudas Machabeus in his fathers steade, ${ }^{k}$ and all his brethrē helped him: and so dyd all they that helde with his father, and fought with cherefulnesse for 1 srael. So ludas gat his people greate honoure: He put on a brest plate as a giaunte, and arayed him self with his harnesse, and defended the hoost with his swearde. In his actes he was like a lyon, a a lyons whelpe roaringe at his praye. He was an enemie to the wicked, ${ }^{l}$ and hūted them out: and brent up those, that vexed his people: So that his enemies fled for feare of him, and all the workers of vogodlynes were put to trouble:

[^927]soch lucke and prosperite was in his honde. This greued dyuerse kynges, but Iacob was greatly reioysed thorow his actes, and he gat him self a greate name for euer.

He wente thorow the cities of Iuda, destroyenge the vngodly out of them, turnynge awaye the wrath from Israel, and receanynge soch as were oppressed: and the fame of him wente vnto the vttemost parte of $y$ earth. Then Appollonius (a prynce of Syria) gathered a mightie greate hoost of the Heithen a out of Samaria, to fight agaynst Israel. Which when Iudas perceaued, he wente forth to mete him, fought with him, slewe him, and a greate multitude with him: the remnaunte fled, and he toke their substaunce. Iudas also toke Appollonius owne swearde, and fought with it all his life longe.

Now when Seron (another prynce of Siria) herde saye, that Iudas had gathered vnto him the congregacion and church of the faithfull, he sayde: I will get me a name and a prayse thorow out the realme: for I will go fight with Iudas and them that are with him, as many as haue despised the kynges commaundement. So he made him ready, and there wente with him a greate mightie hoost of the mngodly, to stonde by him, and to be auenged of the childre of Israel. And when they came nye vnto Bethoron, Iudas wente forth agaynst them with a small company. And when his people sawe soch a greate hoost before thé, they sayde vnto Iudas: How are we able (beynge so fewe) to fight agaynst so greate a multitude and so stronge? seinge we be so weery, and haue fasted all this daye?

But Iudas sayde: ${ }^{a}$ It is a small matter for many to be ouer come with fewe: Yee there is no difference to the God of heanen, to delyuer by a greate multitude or by a small company: ${ }^{b}$ for the victory of the battell stondeth not in the multitude of the hoost, bat the $\mathfrak{C}$ strength commeth from heauen. Beholde, they come agaynst vs with a presumptuous and proude multitude: to destroye rs , oure wyues and oure children, and to robbe vs. But we will fight for oure lyues and for oure lawes, and the LORDE himself shall destroye the before oure face: therfore be not ye afrayed of them.

As soone as he had spoken these worles, he leapte sodenly vpon thē. Thus was Seron [^928]Ismytten, and his hoost put to flight, and Iudas folowed vpon them beyonde Bethoron vnto the playne felde: where there were slayne eight hundreth men of them, and the residue fled in to the londe of the Philistynes. Then all the Heithen on euery syde were afrayed for Iudas and his brethren: so $y^{t}$ the rumoure of him came vnto the kynges eares, for all the Gentiles coude tell of the warres of Iudas.

So whan kynge Antiochus herde these tidinges, he was angrie in his mynde: wherfore he sente forth and gathered an hoost of his whole realme, very stronge armies: and opened his treasury, and gaue his hoost a yeares wagies in honde, commaundynge them to be ready at all tymes.

Neuerthelesse when he sawe, that there was not moneye ynough in his treasuries, and that thorow the discorde and persecucion, which he made in $\mathfrak{y}$ londe (to put downe $\hat{y}$ lawes that had bene of olde tyme) his customes and tributes of the londe were myniszshed: he feared that he was not able for to beare the costes and charges eny lenger, ner to haue soch giftes, to gene so liberally as he dyd a fore, more then the kynges that were before him.

Wherfore he was heny in his mynde, and thought to go in to Persides, ${ }^{c}$ for to take tributes of ${ }^{\dot{y}}$ londe, and so to gather moch moneye. So he left Lysias (a noble man of the kynges bloude) to ouersce the kynges busynesses, from the water Euphrates vnto the borders of Egipte: and to kepe well his somne Antiochus, till he came agayne.

Morouer, he gaue him half of his hoost and elephantes, committed vnto him euery thinge of his mynde, concernynge those which dwelt in Iuda, and Ierusalem: that he shulde sende out an army agaynst them, to destroye and to rote out the power of Israel and the remnaunt of Ierusalem: to put out their memoriall from that place, to set straungers for to inhabit all their quarters, and to parte their londe amoge them. ${ }^{d}$ Thus the kynge toke the other parte of the hoost, and departed from Antioch (a cite of his realme) ouer the water of Euphrates, in the hundreth and xlvij. yeare, and wente thorow the hye countrees.
${ }^{c}$ And Lysias chose vnto him Ptolomy the [^929]somme of Doriminus, Neanor and Gorgias mightie men, t the kynges frendes. These he sent with xl. thousande fote men and vij. thousande horsmen, for to go in to $\ddot{y}$ londe of Judia, and to destroye it, as the kynge commaunded. So they wente forth with all their power, and came to Emmans in to the playne felde. When the marchantes herde the rmmone of them, they and their seruauntes toke very moch siluer and golde, for to bye the ehildren of Israel to be their bonde men. There eame vito them also yet moo men of warre on cuery syde, out of Syria đ thē from the l'alestynes.

Now when Iudas and his brethre sawe that trouble increased, and that the hoost drew nye vnto their borders: consideringe $y$ kynges wordes which he commaunded vnto the people: namely, that they shulde vtterly waist and destroye them: They sayde one to another: Let rs redresse the decaye of oure people, let vs fight for onre folke and for oure sanetuary. Then the congregacion were soone ready gathered to fight, to praie and to make supplicacion rnto God for mercy and grace.
${ }^{\circ}$ As for Ierusalem, it laye voyde, and was as it had bene a wyldernesse. There wente 110 man in nor out at it, and the Sanctuary was troden downe. The aleauntes kepte the castell, there was the habitacion of the Heithen. The myrth of lacob was taken awaye, the pype a the harpe was gone from amonge them.

The Israelites gathered them together, and came to Maspha before Ierusalem: for in Maspha was the place where they prayed afore tyme. ${ }^{b}$ So they fasted that daye, and put sackelothes vpō them, cast aszshes rpon their heades, rente their clothes, and layde forth the bokes of the lawe (wherout ${ }_{y}^{\circ}$ Heithen sought the licknesse of their ymages) and brought the prestes ornamentes, the firstlinges and the Tythes. They set there also the absteyners (which had fulfilled their dayes) before God, and eried with a loude voyce towarde heauen, sayenge: what shal we do with these? and whither shall we cary them awaye?

For thy Sanetuary is troden downe and defyled, thy prestes are come to heuynesse [^930]and dishonoure: and beholde, the Heithen are come together for to destroye vs. Thou knowest what thiges they ymagyn against vs. How maye we stonde before them, excepte thon (o God) be oure helpe?

They blewe out the trompettes also with a loude voyce. Then Iudas ordened eaptaynes ouer the people: ${ }^{d}$ ouer thousandes, ouer hundredes, ouer fiftie, and ouer ten. But as for soch as buylded them houses, maried wyues, planted them vynyardes, and those that were fearfull: 'he commaunded them euery man to go home, acordinge to $y$ lawe. So the hoost remoued, and pitched vpon the South syde of Emmaus.

And Indas sayde: Arme youre selues, be stronge (o my children) make you ready agaynst tomorow in the mornynge, that ye maye fight with these people, which are agreed together to destroye vs a oure Sanctuary. Better is it for vs to dye in battayll, then to se oure people and oure Sanctuary in soch a miserable case. ${ }^{\dagger}$ Neuerthelesse, as $\dot{y}$ will is in heauen, so be it.

THEN toke Gorgias fyue thousande men of fote, and $\mathrm{a}^{g}$ thousande of the best horsmen: and remoued by night, to come nye where $\mathfrak{y}$ Iewes hoost laye, and so to slaye them sodenly. Now the men that kepte the castell, were the coueyers of them. Then arose ludas to smyte the chefe and pryncipall of the kinges hoost at Emmaus, for the army was not yet come together. In the meane season came Gorgias by night in to Iudas tentes: $\pi$ when he founde no man there, he sought them in the mountaynes, and thought they had bene fled awaye because of him. But whè it was daie, Iudas shewed himself in y felde with thre thousande men only, which had nether harnesse ner sweardes to their myndes.

But on the other syde, they sawe that the Heithen were mightie and wel harnessed, and their horsmen aboute them, and all these wel experte in fettes of warre. Then sayde ludas to $\frac{f}{y}$ men that were with him: ${ }^{\text {a }}$ Feare not ye the multitude of them, be not afrayed of their violente runnynge: remembre how oure fathers were delyuered in the 'reed see, when [^931]Pharao threatned them with a greate hoost. ${ }^{a}$ Euen so let vs also crie now towarde heauen : and the LORDE shall haue mercy vpon vs, and remembre the couenaunt of oure fathers, yee and destroye this hoost before oure face this daye: And all Heithen shal knowe, that it is God himself, which delyuereth and saueth Israel.

Then the Heithen lift vp their eyes: and when they sawe that they were commynge agaynst them, they wente out of their tentes in to the battayll: and they that were with Iudas, blewe vp the trompettes. So they ${ }^{\text {b }}$ buckled together, and the Heithen were discomfited, and fled ouer the playne felde : but the hymmost of them were slayne. For they folowed vpon them vnto Assaremoth, and in to the feldes of Idumea towarde Azot and Iannia: so that there were slayne of them vpon a thre thousande men. So ludas turned agayne with his hoost, and sayde vnto the people: Be not gredy of $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ spoyles, we haue yet a battayll to fight: for Gorgias ז his hoost are here by vs in the mountaynes, but stonde ye fast agaynst oure enemies, and ouercome them : then maye ye safely take the spoyles.
As Iudas was speakynge these wordes, there apeared one parte of them vpon the mount. But when Gorgias sawe that they of his partie were fled, and the tentes brent vp (for by the smoke they might vnderstonde what was done) they perceauynge this, were very sore afrayed: and when they sawe also that Iudas and his hoost were in y f felde ready to stryke battayll, they fled euerychone in to the londe of the Heithen.

So Iudas turned agayne to spoyle the tentes, where they gat moch golde and syluer, precious stones, purple « greate riches. Thus they wente home, and sunge a Psalme of thankesgeuynge and ${ }^{c}$ praysed God in heauen : for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for euer: And so Israel had a greate victory in that daye.

Now all the Heithen that escaped, came and tolde Lysias euery thinge as it happened. Wherfore Lysias was sore afrayed and greued in his mynde, because Israel had not gottē soch mysfortune as he wolde they shulde, nether as the kynge ${ }^{d}$ commaunded. The neste yeare folowinge, gathered Lysias thre score thousande chosen men of fote, and fyue thousande horsmen, to fight agaynst them.

So they came in to lewry, and pitched $#$ their tentes at Bethoron, where Iudas came agaynst them with ten thousande men. And when he sawe so greate mightie an hoost, he made his prayer and sayde : Blessed be thou (o sauioure of Israel) which diddest 'destroye the violent power of the giaunte, in the honde of thy seruaunt Dauid, and gauest the hoost of the Heithe in to the honde of Ionathas (the sonne of ${ }^{f}$ Saul) and of his weapen bearer.

Put this hoost now in to the honde of thy people of Israel, and let them be confounded in their multitude and horsmen. Make then afrayed, © discomforth the boldnes of their strength, $\dot{y}$ they maye be moued thorow their destruccion. Cast them downe thorow the swearde of thy louers, then shal all they that knowe thy name, prayse the with thankesgeuynge.

So they stroke the batell, and there were slayne of Lysias hoost, fyue thousande men. Then Lysias seynge the discomfetynge of his men, and the manlynesse of the lewes, how they were ready, ether to lyue or to dye like men: He wente vnto Antioche and chose out men of warre : that when they were gathered together, they might come agayne in to Iewry. Then sayde Iudas and his brethren: beholde, oure enemies are discomfited: Let vs now go vp, to clése and to repayre the Sanctuary.
Vpon this, all the hoost gathered them together, and wente vp vato mount Sion. Now when they sawe the ${ }^{6}$ Sanctuary laied waist, the aulter defyled, the dores brent vp , the shrubbes growinge in the courtes, like as in a wod or cpon mountaynes, yee and that the prestes Celles were broken downe: They rente their clothes, made greate lamentacion, cast aszshes upon their heades, fell downe flat to the grounde, made a greate noyse with the trompettes, and cried towarde heauen.
Then Iudas apoynted certayne men to fight against those which were in the castel, till they had clensed the Sanctuary. So he chose prestes $\mathfrak{y}$ were videfyled, soch as had pleasure in the lawe of God: and they clensed the Sanctuary, 九 bare out the defyled [^932]stones in to an vncleane place. And for so moch as the aulter of burntofferynges was mihalowed, he toke adiysement, what he might do withall: so he thought it was best to destroye it (lest it shulde happen to do them eny shame) for the Ileithen had defyled it, a therfore they brake it downe. As for the stones, they layed them yp ypon the mountayne by the house in a conuenient place: till there came a prophet to shewe, what shulde be done with them.

So they toke whole stones acordinge to the lawe, and buylded a new aulter soch one as was before, and made yp the Sanctuary within and without, and halowed the courtes. They made new ornamentes, a brought $\mathfrak{y}$ candilsticke, the aulter of incense, and the table in to the temple. The incense layed they vpon the aulter, i lighted the lampes which were ypon the candilsticke, that they might burne in the temple. They set the shewbred vpon the table, and hanged vp the vale, and set vp $y^{\circ}$ temple, as it was afore. ${ }^{6}$ And vpon the xxv. daye of the ix. moneth (which is called the moneth of Casleu) in the C.xlviij. yeare: they rose vp by tymes in the mornynge for to do sacrifice (acordinge to the lawe) vpon the new burnt offrynge aulter, that they had made: after the tyme and season that $\dot{y}$ Heithen had defyled it. The same daye was it set vp agayne, with songes pipes, harpes and cymbales.
And all the people fell vpon their faces, worshippynge and thankynge the God of heauen, which had geuen them the victory. "So they kepte the dedicacion of the aulter viij. dayes, offerynge burntsacrifices and thankofferinges with gladnesse. They deckte the temple also with crownes and shyldes of golde, and halowed the portes and celles, and hanged dores ypon them. Thus was there very greate gladnes amonge the people, because the blasphemy of the Heithe was put awaye.

So Iudas and his brethren with the whole eogregacion of Israel, ordened, that the tyme of the dedicacion ${ }^{d}$ of $y$ aulter shulde be kepte in his season from yeare to yeare, by the space of viij. dayes, from the xxv. daye of the moneth Casleu: yee and that with myrth and gladnesse.

[^933]And at the same tyme buylded they vp $\dot{y}$ mount Sion with hye walles and stronge towres rounde aboute: lest $\dot{y}$ Gentiles shulde come and treade it downe, as they dyd afore. ${ }^{e}$ Therfore Iudas set men of warre in it, to kepe it: and made it stronge, for to defende Bethsura: that the people might have a refuge agaynst the Edomites.

©be b. Cbapter.

IT happened also that when $\dot{f}$ Heithen $\mathfrak{a}$ rounde aboute herde, ${ }^{j}$ how that the aulter and the Sanctuary were set vp in their olde estate: it displeased them very sore, wherfore they thought to destroye the generacion of Iacob that was amonge them: In so moch that they beganne to slaye and to persecute certayne of $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ people. ${ }^{\circ}$ Then Iudas fought against the children of Esau in Idumea, and agaynst those which were at Arabathane ${ }^{4}$ (for they dwelt rounde aboute $\frac{f}{y}$ Israelites) where he slewe $\pi$ spoyled a greate multitude of the. He thought also vpon the malice and vnfaithfulnes of the children of Bean, how they were a snare and stoppe vnto $\dot{y}$ people, and how they layed waite for them in the hie waye: wherfore he shut them vp in to towers, and came vnto them, condemned them, and brent vp their towres, with all that were in them.

Afterwarde wente he agaynst the children of Ammon, wherof he founde a mightie power and a greate multitude of people, with Tymothy their captayne. So he stroke many battayls with them, which were distroyed before him. And when he had slayne them, he wanne Gazer the cite, with the townes belonginge therto, and so turned agayne in to lewry. The Heithen also in Galaad gathered them together, agaynst the Israelites that were in their quarters, to slaye them: but they fled to the castel of Datheman, and sent letters vito Iudas and his brethren, sayenge: The Heithen are gathered agaynst vs on euery syde, to destroye vs, and now they make the for to come and laye sege to $\dot{y}$ castel, wherunto we are fled, a Timothy is the captayne of their hoost : come therfore, and delyuer vs out of their hondes: for there is a greate multitude of is slayne all ready. Yee and oure brethren that were at Tubin, are slayne and destroyed (wel nye a thousande men) and their wyues, their children and their goodes haue the enemies led awaye captyue.

Iosephus, cap. 12. libro 12. S Eze. 25. c. and 35. a, A 2 Ma. 10. c.

Whyle these letters were yet a readinge, beholde, there came other messañgers from Galilee, with rente clothes: which tolde euen the same tydinges, and sayde, that they of Ptolomais, of Tirus and of Sidon were gathered agaynst them, and that all Galilee was fylled with enemies to destroye Israel. When Iudas and $\dot{y}$ people herde this, they came together (a greate congregacion) "to deuyse, what they might do for their brethren, that were in trouble and beseged of their enemies. And Iudas sayde vnto Symon his brother: chose $y$ out certayne men, and go delyuer thy brethren in Galilee: As for me and my brother Ionathas, we wyl go in to Galaadithim. So he left Iosephus y sonne of Zachary, and Asarias, to be captaynes of the people and to kepe the remnaunt of the hoost in lewry, a commaunded them, sayenge : Take the ouersight of this people, and se that ye make no warre agaynst the Heithen, vntill the tyme that we come agayne. And vnto Simon he gaue thre thousande men for to go in to Galilee, but Indas himself had eight thousande in to Galaadithim.

Then wente Symon in to Galilee, and stroke dyuerse batels with the Heithen: whom he discomfited, and folowed vpon them vnto the porte of Ptolonais. And there were slayne of the Heithen allmost iij. thousande men. So he toke the spoyles of them, and caried awaye the Israelites (that were in Galilee and Arbatis) with their wyues, their children and all that they had, and brought them in to Iewry with greate gladnesse. Iudas Machabeus also and his brother Ionathas, wente ouer Iordane, and trauayled iij. dayes iourney in the wyldernesse: Where the Nebuthees met them, and receaued them louyngly, and tolde the euery thinge that had happened vnto their brethren in Galaadithim, and how that many of them were beseged in Barasa, Bosor, Alimis, Casphor, Mageth and Carnain (all these are stronge walled and mightie greate cities) and $\dot{y}$ they were kepte in other cities of Galaad also : and tomorow they are apoynted to brynge their hoost vito these cities, to take them and to wynne them in one daye.

So Iudas and his hoost turned in all the haist in the wildernesse towarde Bosor, and wanne the cite, slewe all the males with the swearde, toke all their goodes, and set fyre ypon the cite. And in the night they toke their iourneye from thence, and came to the castell. And by tymes in the mornynge when they loked vp, beholde, there was an innumerable people bearynge laders and other instrumètes of warre, to take the castell and to ouer come them.

When Iudas sawe that the battayll beganne, and that the noyse therof wente up and range in to the Heauen, and that there was so greate a crie in the cite: He sayde vato his hoost: fight this daye for youre brethren. And so came behynde their enemies in thre companies, and blewe up the trompettes, and cried in their prayer to God.

But as soone as Tymothis hoost perceaued that Machabeus was there, they fled from him, and $\dot{f}$ other slewe them downe right sore: so that there were kylled of them that same daye, allmost eight thousande men. Then departed Iudas vuto Maspha, layed sege unto it and wanne it, slewe all the males in it, spoyled it, and set fyre ypon it. From thence wente he and toke Casbon, Mageth, Bosor and the other cities in Galaad.

After this gathered Timothy another hoost, which pitched their tentes before Raphon ${ }^{b}$ beyonde the water. Iudas sent to spye the hoost, and they brought him worde againe, sayenge: All the Heithen that be rounde aboute vs, are gathered vnto hin, and the hoost is very greate: Yee they haue hyred the Arabians to helpe them, a haue pitched their tentes beyonde the water, and are ready to come and fight agaynst the. So Iudas wente on to mete them.

And Timothy sayde vinto the captaynes of his hoost: when Iudas and his hoost come nye the ryuer: yf he go ouer first, we shall not be able to withstonde him: for why, he wil be to stronge for us. But yf he darre not come ouer, so that he pitch his tente beyonde the water: then will we go ouer, for we shalbe stronge ynough agaynst him. Now as soone as Iudas came to the ryuer, he appoynted certayne scrybes of the people, and commaunded them, sayenge: se that ye leaue none behynde vpon this syde of $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ ryuer, but let euery man come to the battayll. So he wente first ouer vato them, and his people after him.

And all the Heithen were discomfited before him, and let their weapens fall, and rame in to the temple that was at Carnaim. Which cite Iudas wame, and brent the temple with all $\frac{y}{y}$ were in it : So was Carnaim subdued, and might not withstōde ludas. Then Iudas gathered all the lsraelites that were in Galaadithim, from $\grave{y}$ leest whto the most, with their wyues and their ehildren (a very greate hoost) for to come in to the londe of luda.
So they eame vnto Ephron, which was a mightie, greate and stronge cite, ${ }^{a}$ and laye in their waye. For they coude not go by it, nether of the right honde ner of the left, but must go thorow it. Neuerthelesse they that were in the cite, wolde not let them go thorow, but walled $v p$ the portes with stones. And Iudas sent vito the with peaceable wordes, sayenge: Let vs passe thorow youre londe, ${ }^{b}$ that we maye go in to oure owne eonitre: there shal no body do you harme, we wil but only go thorow. But they wolde not let them in.

Wherfore Iudas commanded a proclamacion to be made thorow out the hoost, that euery man shulde kepe his ordre: and so they dyd their best like valeaunt men.

And Iudas beseged the cite all that daie and all that night, and so wanne it: where they slewe as many as were males, and destroyed the cite, and spoyled it, and wēte thorow all the cite ouer them that were slayne. Then wente they ouer Iordane in to the playne felde before Bethsan. And Iudas helped those forwarde that came behynde, and gaue the people good exortacion all $\dot{y}$ waye thorow, till they were come in to the londe of Iuda. Thus they wente vp unto the mount Sion, where they offred with myrth and thankesgeuynge: ${ }^{c}$ because there were none of them slayne, but came home agayne peaceably.

Now what tyme as Iudas and Ionathas were in the londe of Galaad, and Symon their brother in Galilee before Ptolomais: Then losephus the sonne of Zachary and Asarias the captaynes, hearinge of the actes [^934]that were done and of the battels that were stroken, sayde: Let vs get vs a name also, and go fight agaynst the Heithen that are rounde aboute vs.

So they gaue their hoost a commaundement, and wente towarde Iamnia. Then came Gorgias and his men out of the cite, to fight agaynst them: Iosephus also and Asarias were chased vnto $\mathfrak{y}$ borders of Iewry, $\mathfrak{x}$ there were slayne $\dot{y}$ daye of $\frac{8}{y}$ people of Israel ij. M. men: so $\frac{\mathfrak{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ there was a greate misery amoge $y$ people, a all beeause they were not obediét vnto Iudas a his brethren, but ${ }^{d}$ thought they shulde quyte them selues manfully. Neuertheles they came not of the sede of these men, by whom Israel was helped. But the men that were with Iudas, were greatly commended in the sight of all Israel and all IIeithen, where so euer their name was herde vpō, and the people came mato them byddinge them welcome.

After this wente ludas forth with his brethren, and fought agaynst the children of Esan, in the londe $\dot{y}$ lieth towarde the south where he wanne the cite of Hebron and the townes that lye besyde it: and as for the walles and towres rounde aboute it, he brent them rp. Then remoued he to go in to the lode of the Philistines, and wente thorow Samaria. At the same tyme were there many prestes slaine in y battayll, which wilfully a without advysenient wente out for to fight to get them honoure. And when Iudas came to Azot in the Philistynes londe, he brake downe their altares, ${ }^{e}$ brent the ymages of their Idols, spoyled the cities, and came agayne in to the londe of luda.

NOW when kynge Antiochus tranayled thorow the hye countrees, $f$ he herde that Elymas in Persia was a noble and plenteous cite in siluer and golde, a that there was in it a very rich temple: where as were clothes, cote armoures and shyldes of golde, which Alexander the some of Philippe kynge of Macedonia had left behynde him. Wherfore he wente aborte to take the cite and to spoyle it, but he was not able: for ${ }^{\mathrm{y}}$ citisès were warned of it, a fought with him. And so he fled, and departed with greate henynesse, a [^935]came agayne in to Babilon. Morouer there came one which brought him tidinges in Perside, ${ }^{a}{ }^{\frac{t}{y}}$ his hoostes which were in the londe of Iuda, were dryuen awaye, and how that Lisias wente forth first with a greate power, and was dryuen awaye of the lewes: how they had wonne the victory, and gotten greate goodes out of the hoostes that peryshed: how they had broken downe the abhominacion, which he set up vpon the altare at Ierusalem, ${ }^{b}$ and fenced the Sanctuary with hye walles, like as it was afore: yee and Bethsura his cite also.

So it chaunced, that when the kinge had herde these wordes, he was afrayed and grened very sore. Wherfore he layed him downe ypon his bed, and fell sicke for very sorowe: and all because it had not happened as he had deuysed. And there continued he longe, for his grefe was euer more and more, so $\dot{y}$ he sawe he must nedes dye. Therfore be sent for his frendes, a sayde moto them: $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ slepe is gone fro mine eyes, for $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ very sorowe and vexaciō of herte $\mathrm{y}^{t}$ I haue. For when I considre in my mynde $\underset{y}{\dot{g}}$ greate aduersitie ${ }^{\frac{t}{y}} \mathrm{I}$ am come vnto and the floudes of heuynesse which I am in , where as afore tyme I was so mery, and so greatly set by (by reason of my power) Againe, cosideringe $\frac{8}{y}$ euell $\stackrel{t}{y}$ I have done at lerusale, from whence I toke all $\dot{y}$ riches of golde and syluer $\frac{t}{y}$ were in it, a sent to fetch awaye the inhabitours of Iewry without eny reason why: I knowe, $\frac{t}{y}$ these troubles are come vpon me for the same cause. And beholde, I must dye with greate sorow in a straūge londe.

Then called he for one Philippe a frende of his, whom he made ruder of all his realme and gaue him the crowne, his robe and his rynge: that he shulde take his sonne Antiochus rnto him and brynge him vp, till he might raigne himself. ${ }^{c}$ So the kynge Antiochus dyed there, the kynge was deed, ${ }^{\text {d }}$ he ordened Antiochus his somne (whom he had brought vp) to raigne in his fathers steade, and called him Eupator. Now they that were in the castel (at Ierusalem) kepte in the Iewes rounde aboute the Sāctuary, and sought euer styll to do them harme, for the strengthenynge of the Heithen.

Wherfore Iudas thought to destroye them,

[^936]and called all the people together, $\dot{y}^{\text {t }}$ they might laye sege vnto them. So they came together in the Cl . yeare, and beseged the layenge forth their ordinaunce and instrumentes of warre. Then certayne of them $\frac{t}{y}$ were beseged wente forth (vnto whom some vngodly men of Israel ioyned thē selues also) and wente vnto the kynge, sayēge: How longe wil it be, or thou punysh and avenge oure brethren? We haue bene euer mynded to do thy father seruyce, to walke in his statutes, and to obeye his commaundementes: Therfore oure people fell from vs, and where so euer they founde eny of vs, they slewe them : and they haue not only medled with vs, but with all oure countrees: and beholde, this daye are they beseginge the castell at Ierusalem, and haue made vp the stronge holde in Bethsura: ${ }^{\text {e }}$ And yf thou doest not preuente them right soone, they wil do more then these, and thou shalt not be able to oucrcome them.

When the kynge herde this, he was very angrie, ${ }^{t}$ and called all his frendes, the captaynes of his fote men and of all his horse men together. He hyred men of warre also out of other realmes and out of the Iles of the see, which came ruto him. And the nombre of his hoost was an hundreth thousande fote men, and twentye thousande horsmé, a xxxij. Elephantes wel exercised to battayll. ${ }^{g}$ These came thorow Idumea vito Bethsura, and beseged it a longe season, and made dyuerse instrumentes of warre agaynst it. But the lewes came out and brent them, and fought like men. Then departed Iudas from the castell at Ierusalem, and remoued y hoost towarde Bethzacarā ouer agaynst the kynges armye.

So the kynge arose before the daye, and brought the power of his hoost in to $\stackrel{g}{y}$ waie to Bethzacaran, where the hoostes made them to the battayll, blowynge the trompettes. ${ }^{h}$ And to prouoke the Elephantes for to fight, they shewed them the sappe of reed grapes and molberies. And deuyded the Elephantes amonge the hoost: so that by euery Elephante there stode a M. men wel harnessed, and hehmettes of stele vpon their heades: Yee vnto euery one of the Elephantes also, were ordened $v$. C. horsmen of the best, which [^937]waited of the Elephante, gonge where so ener he wente, and departed not from him. Enery Elephante was conered with a stroge tower of wod, where ypon were xxxij. valeaunt men with weapens to fight, $\pi$ within it was a man of Inde to rule the beest.

As for the remnamt of the horsmen, he set them ypon hoth the sydes in two partes with trompettes, to prouoke the hoost, and to stere DP soch as were slowe in the armye. And when the somne shone pon their shyldes of golde and stele, the momntaynes glistered agayne at them, a were as bright as the creszshettes of fyre. The kynges hoost also was deuyded, one parte tpon the hie mountaynes, the other lowe beneth: so they wente on, takynge good hede, and kepinge their ordre. And all they that dwelt in the londe, were afrayed at the noyse of their hoost, when the multitude wente forth, and when the weapens smote together, for the hoost was both greate a mightie. ludas also and his hoost entred in to the battayll, and slewe vi. C. men of the kynges armye.

Now when Eleasar the Sonne of Saura dyd se one of $\mathfrak{y}$ Elephantes deckte with the kynges badge, and was a more goodly beest the the other: He thought $\hat{y}$ kinge shulde be ypo hin, and ioperde himself to delyuer his people, and to get him a perpetuall name.

Wherfore be rame with a corage vito the Elephante in the myddest of the hoost, smytinge them downe of both the sydes, and slewe many aboute him. So wente he to the Elephantes fete, and gat him vnder him, and slewe him: then fell the Elephante downe rpon him, and there he dyed. Iudas also and his men seinge the power of the kinge and the mightie violence of his hoost, departed ff from them. And the kynges armye wente tp agaynst them towarde Ierusalem, and pitched their tentes in lewry besyde mount Sion. Morouer the kynge toke truce with them that were in Bethsura.

But when they came out of the cite ${ }^{b}$ (because they had no vytales within, and the londe laye untylled) the kynge toke Bethsura, and set men to kepe it, t turned his hoost to the place of the Sanctuary, and layed sege to it a greate whyle. Where he made all maner ordinaunce: handbowes, fyrie dartes, rackettes to cast stones, seorpions to shute arowes, and slynges. The lewes also made ordinaunce agaynst theirs, and fought a longe 'season.

But in the cite there were no vytayles, for it was the seuenth yeare of the warres, and those Heithen that remayned in Iewry had eaten vp all their stoare. And in the Sanctuary were few men lefte, for the hunger came so vpon them, that they were scatered abrode euery man to his owne place.

So when Lysias herde, that Philippe ${ }^{c}$ (whom Antiochus the kynge whyle he was yet lyuinge, had ordened to bringe vp Antiochus his sonne, that he might be kynge) was come agayne out of Persia and Media with the kynges hoost, and thought to optayne the kyngdome: He gat him to the kynge in all the haist and to the captaynes of the hoost, and sayde: we decrease daylie, and oure rytales are but small: Agayne, the place that we laye sege vnto, is very stronge, and it were oure parte to se for the realme. Let vs agre with these men and take truce with them, and with all their people, and graunte them to lyue after their lawe, as they dyd afore. For they be greued and do all these thinges agaynst vs, because we haue despysed their lawe. So the kynge and the prynces were content, and sent into them to make peace, and they receaued it. Now whe the kynge and the prynces had made an ooth vnto them, they came out of the castel, and the kynge wete rp to mount Sion. But when he sawe that $\stackrel{\stackrel{y}{y}}{ }$ place was wel fenced, he brake the ooth that he had made, and commaunded to destroye the wall rounde aboute. Then departed he in all the haist, and returned vnto Antioche, where he founde Philippe hauynge dominion of the cite. So he fought agaynst him, and toke the cite agayne in to his hondes.

IN the Clj . yeare came ${ }^{d}$ Demetrius ${ }^{\circ}$ somne of Seleucus from $\stackrel{f}{y}$ cite of Rome with a small company of men, vnto a cite of the see coast, and there he bare rule. And it chaunced, that when he came to Antioch the cite of his Progenitours, his hoost toke Antiochus and Lysias, to brynge them vnto him. But when it was tolde him, he saide: let me not se their faces. So the hoost put them to death. Now when Demetrius was set rpon [^938]the trone of his kyngdome, there came vnto him wicked and vngodly men of Isracl: whose captayne was Alcimus, that wolde haue bene made hye prest. These men accused the people of Israel vnto the kynge, sayenge: Iudas and his brethren haue slayne thy frendes, and dryuen rs out of oure owne londe. Wherfore sende now some man (to whom thou geuest credence) that he maye go and se all the destruccion, which he hath done vnto vs and to the kynges londe, and let him be punished with all his frēdes and fauourers. of his, which was a man of greate power in the realme (beyonde the greate water) and faithfull mnto the kynge: and sent him to se the destruccion that Iudas had done. And as for that wicked Alcimus, he made him hye Prest, and commaunded him to be auenged of the children of Israel. So they stode rp, and came with a greate hoost in to $\dot{y}$ londe of Iuda, sendinge messañgers to Iudas a his brethree, a speakinge vuto them with peaceable wordes: but vnder disceate. Therfore Iudas a his people belened not their saiege, ${ }^{a}$ for they sawe $\frac{t}{y}$ they were come with a greate hoost.

After this came $\frac{8}{y}$ scribes together vnto Alcimus © Bachides, trustinge the best unto them. And first, $\hat{y}$ Assideans requyred peace of them, sayenge: Alcimus $\dot{y}$ prest is come of the sede of Aarō, how can he disceaue vs? So they gaue them louige wordes, a swore vnto them, and sayde: we wil do you no harme, nether youre frendes: and they beleued them. But the very same daye toke they lx. men of them, a slewe thē: acordinge to $\dot{y}$ wordes $\stackrel{t}{y}$ are writté: They haue cast $\dot{y}$ flesh of thy sanctes, a shed their bloude roūde aboute Ierusale, ${ }^{b}$, 5 there was nomā $\frac{t}{y}$ wolde bury thē.

So there came a greate feare and drede amonge the people, sayenge: there is nether treuth nor righteousnesse in them, for they haue broke the appoyntment and ooth that they made. And Bachides remoued his hoost from Ierusalem, and pitched his tente at Bethzecha: where he sent forth, and toke many of them that had forsaken him: He slewe many of the people also, and cast them in to a greate pytt. Then committed he the londe vnto Alcimus, and left men of warre with him to helpe him, and Bachides himself wente vato the kynge. And thus Alcimus defended his hie presthode, and all soch as vexed Israel, resorted vnto him: In so moch that they optayned the lode of Iuda, and dyd moch euell vnto the Israelites.

Now when Iudas sawe all the myschefe that Alcimus and his company had done (yee more then the Heithe them selues) vnto the Israelites: He wente forth rounde aboute all the borders of Iewry, and punyshed those rnfaithfull rennagates, so that they came no more out in to the countre. So whe Alcimus sawe, that Iudas and his people had gotten the vpperhande, and that he was not able to abyde them: he wente agayne to the kynge, and sayde all the worst of them that he coude. Then the kynge sent Nicanor, one of his chefe prynces (which bare euell wyl moto Israel) and commaunded him, that he shulde vtterly destroye the people.

So Nicanor came to Ierusalem with a greate hoost, ${ }^{c}$ and sent vito Iudas and his brethren with frendly wordes (but vnder disceate) sayenge: there shal be no warre betwixte me and you: I wil come with a few men, to se how ye do, with frenshipe. Ypon this he came vnto Iudas, and they saluted one another peaceably: but the enemies were appoynted to take Iudas by violence. Neuertheles it was tolde Iudas, $\frac{\dot{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ he came vnto him but rinder disceate: wherfore he gat him awaie from him, and wolde se his face nomore. When Nicanor perceaucd $\frac{t}{y}$ his councell was bewrayed, he wente out to fight agaynst Iudas, besyde Capharsalama: Where there were slayne of Nicanors hoost, v. M. men: the residue fled vnto the castell of Dauid.

After this came Nicanor 'p rnto mon̄t Sion: and the prestes with the elders of the people wente forth to salute him peaceably, $\pi$ to shewe him $\hat{y}$ burnt sacrifices $\frac{t}{y}$ were offered for the kynge. But he laughed the to scorne, mocked thé, defyled their offeringes, and spake diszdanedly, yee and swore in his wroth, sayenge: ${ }^{d}$ If Iudas and his hoost be not delyuered now in to my hondes, as soone as euer I come agayne (and fayre well) I shal burne vp this house. With that, wente he out in a greate anger. Then the prestes came in, and stode before the aulter of the tēple, wepinge $\pi$ sayenge: For so moch as thou (o LORDE) hast chosen this house, that thy name might be called vpon therin, and $\dot{y}$ it shukle be an house of praier and peticion ${ }^{a}$ wn to thy people: Be avenged of this mai a his hoost, and let them be slayne with $y$ swearde: remembre the blasphemies of them, it suffie them not to continue eny longer.

When Nicanor was gone from lerusalem, he pitched his tente at Bethoron, and there an hoost met hi out of Siria. And ludas came to Adarsa with iij. M. me , a made his prayer moto God, sayenge: O LORDE, because the messaungers of kynge Senacherib blasphemed the, the angel wente forth, and slewe an Clixxy. thousande of them: ${ }^{6}$ Euen so destroye thou this hoost before vs to daie that other people maye knowe, how that he hath blasphemed thy Sanctuary : and punysh him, aeordinge to his malieiousnesse.
And so the loostes stroke the felde, the thirtente daye of the moneth Adar: and Nieanors hoost was discomfited, and he himself was first slayne in the battayll. ${ }^{c}$ When Nieanors men of warre sawe that he was kylled, they cast awaye their weapens and Hed: but the Iewes folowed ypon them an whole dayes iourney, from Adazer vnto Gazara, blowinge with the trompettes, and makinge tokens after them. So the Iewes came forth of all the townes there aboute, and blewe out their hornes ypon them, and turned agaynst them: Thus were they all slayne, and not one of them lefte.

Then they toke their substaunce for a pray, and smote of Nicanors heade a his right honde ( ${ }^{d}$ which he helde yp so proudly) and brought it with them, and häged it vp afore Ierusalem. Wherfore the people were exceadingly reioysed, and passed ouer that daye in greate gladnesse. And Iudas ordened, that iy same daye (namely the xiij. daye of $\mathfrak{y}$ moneth Adar) shulde be kepte in myrth euery yeare. Thus the londe of Iuda was in rest a litle whyle.

* 1UDAS herde also the fame of the Romaynes, that they were mightie and valeaunt men, agreable to all thinges that are requyred of them, t make peace with all men, which come wito them, and how they were doughty men of strength. Besydes that, it was tolde him of their battayls a noble actes whieh they dyd in Galacia, how they had con-

Elephantes, with horsmen, charettes, and a very greate hoost: how they toke him self alyue, and ordened him (with soch as shulde raigne after him) to paye the a greate trybute, 'yee and to fynde the good suerties and plege: Besydes all this, how they had take from him India, Media and Lydia (his best londes) and geuen them to kynge Eumenus. Agayne, how they perceauynge $\frac{t}{y}$ the Grekes were comynge to vexe them: sent against the a captaine of an hoost which gave thē battayll, slewe many of thē, led awaye ther wyues and children captyue, spoyled the , toke possession of their londe, destroyed their stronge holdes, and subdued the to be their bonde men vnto this daye: Morouer, how $\frac{t}{y}$ as for other kyngdomes a lles, which somtyme withstode the, they destroyed them, and brought them vader their dominion: But helped ener their owne frendes and those $\frac{\dot{y}}{y}$ were confederate with them, a conquered kyngdomes both farre a nye: a ${ }^{\frac{t}{y}}$ who so euer herde of their renowne, was afrayed of them: for whom they wolde helpe to their kyngdomes, those raigned: and who it lyked not them to raigne, they put him downe: And how they were come to greate preeminence: hauynge no kynge amonge thē, nether eny man clothed in purple, to be magnified there thorow: but had ordened the selues a perlament, where in there sat iij. naunce of all their londe: to whom euery man was obedient, and $\frac{t}{y}$ there was nether euell will ner discencion amonge them.

Then Iudas chose Eupolemus the sonne of Ihon the somne of Iacob, a lason the sonne of Eleazar, a sent the vito Rome for to make frenshipe a a bonde of loue with them: ${ }^{t}$ they might take fro them the bondage of $\dot{y}$ Grekes, for y lewes sawe $\frac{t}{y}$ the Grekes wolde subdue the kyngdome of Israel. So they wēte mito Rome (a very greate iourney) a came in to ẙ Perlamēt, a saide: Iudas Machabeus with his brethree a the people of $\dot{y}$ lewes hath sent vs vnto you, to make a bonde of frendshipe a peace with you, a ye to note vs as youre louers a frendes. And $\mathfrak{y}$ matter pleased y y Romaines right well, wherfore it was writte vp: of $\dot{y}$ which $\dot{y}$ Romaynes made a wrytinge in tables of Lato d sent it to Ierusalé: $\frac{f}{y}$ they might haue by the a memoriall of $\mathfrak{y}$ same peace t böde of frèdshipe, after this maner: God saue $\dot{y}$ Romaines a $\dot{y}$ people of the lewes both by see a by lode, a kepe $y$ swearde तt enemy frō the for euermore. Also they shal nether geue nor sede rnto their enemies vitales, weapēs, money ner shippes: but fulfil this charge at the Romaynes pleasure, a take nothinge from them therfore. Againe yf the people of the Iewes happe first to haue warre, the Romaynes shal stonde by the with a good wil, acordinge as the tyme wil suffre: Nether shal they geue vnto the Iewes enemies, vytales, weapens, money ner shippes. Thus are the Romaynes content to do, a shal fulfill their charge without eny disceate.

Acordinge to these articles, the Romaynes made the bonde with the Iewes. Now after these articles (sayde they) yf eny of the parties wyll put to them, or take eny thinge from them: they shal do it with the consente of both: and what so euer they adde then vito them or take from them, it shall stonde fast. And as touchinge the euell that Demetrius hath done vnto the Iewes, we haue wrytten vnto him, sayenge: Wherfore layest thou thy heuy yocke vpon the lewes oure frendes and louers? If they make eny complaynte of [^941]the agayne vnto vs, we shall defende them, and fight with the by see and by londe.

The if. Cyapter.

IN y meane season ${ }^{a}$ when Demetrius herde that Nicanor $\pi$ his hoost was slayne in the felde, he proceded further to sende Bachides and Alcinus againe in to lewry, and those that were in the right wynge of his hoost, with them. So they wēte forth by the waye that ledeth vnto Galgala, and pitched their tentes before Mesaloth which is in Arbellis, and wame the cite, and slewe moch people. In $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ first moneth of the Clij. yeare, they brought their hoost to Ierusalem, and rose vp and came to Berea, with xx. M. fote men, and ij . M. horsmen.

Now Iudas had pitched his tente at Laisa, with thre thousande chosen men. And when they sawe the multitude of the other army $\frac{t}{y}$ it was so greate, they were sore afrayed, it many conveyed them selues out of the hoost, In so moch $\frac{t}{y}$ there abode no mo of them but viij. C. men. When Iudas sawe that his hoost fayled him, and that he must nedes fight: it brake his herte, $\dot{y}_{y}$ he had no tyme to gather them together: wherfore the man was in extreme trouble. Nenerthelesse he sayde vnto them, $\stackrel{+}{y}$ remayned with him: Vp, let vs go agaynst oure enemies, peraduanture we shal be able to fight with them. But they wolde haue stopped him, sayenge: we shall not be able, therfore let vs now sane oure lyues, and turne agayne to oure brethren, and then wil we fight agaynst the $\bar{e}$, for we are here but fewe. And Iudas sayde: God forbyd, that we shulde fle from them. Wherfore yf oure tyme be come, let vs dye manfully for oure brethren, and let is not stayne oure honoure. Then the hoost remoned out of the tentes, a stode agaynst them. The horsmen were denyded in two partes: the slynge casters and the archers wente before the hoost, and all the mightie men were formest in the felde. Bachides himself was in the right wynge of the batell, a the hoost drewe nye in two partes, and blewe the trompettes. They of Iudas syde blewe $\dot{y}$ trompettes also, $\mathbb{\pi}$ the earth shoke at the noyse of the hoostes, and they stroke a felde from the morow till night. And when Iudas sawe $\frac{7}{y}$ Baehides hoost was strongest of the right syde, lee toke with him all the hardy mē, and brake
'the right wyige of their ordre, and folowed yon them vinto the monnt A zot.

Now when they which were of the lefte wynge, sawe that the right side was discomfited, they persecuted ludas and them that were with him. 'Then was there a sore battayll, for many were slayne and wounded of both the parties, Iudas also himself was kylled, and the remmannt lled. So lonathas and Symo toke Iudas their brother, and buried him in his fithers sepulcre in the cite of Modin. And all the people of Israel made greate lamentacion for him, and mourned longe, sayenge: Alas, that this worthy shulde be slayne, which delyuered $\dot{y}$ people of Israel. As for other thinges pertayninge to $\dot{f}$ battayls of Judas, the noble actes that he did and of his worthynesse: they are not writte, for they were very many.
$\mathbb{C}$
And after the death of Iudas, wicked mee came tp in all the coastes of Israel, ${ }^{a}$ and there arose all soch as worke vngodlynesse. In those dayes was there a greate derth in the londe, and all the countre gaue ouer them selues t theirs vnto Bachides. So Bachides chose wicked men, and made them lordes in the londe. These sought out and made search for ludas frendes, and brought them rnto Bachides: which auenged himself rpon thē with greate despite. And there came so greate trouble in Israel, as was not sens the time that no prophet was sene there.

Then cane all Iudas frendes together, and sayde vnto Ionathas: For so moch as thy brother Iudas is deed, there is none like him to go forth agaynst oure enemies, agaynst Bachides, and soch as are aduersaries vnto oure people. Wherfore this daye we chose the for him, to be oure prynce and captayne to ordre oure batell. And Ionathas toke the gouernaunce vpon him at the same tyme, and ruled in steade of his brother Iudas. When Bachides gat knowlege therof, he sought for to slaye him: But Ionathas and Symon his brother, perceauynge that, fled in to $\dot{y}$ wildernesse of Thecua with all their company, and pitched their tētes by the water pole of Asphar.

Which when Bachides viderstode, he came oner lordane with all his hoost vpon $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ Sabbath daye. Now had Ionathas sent his brother thon (a captayine of the people) to praye
|his frendes the Nabuthites, $\stackrel{t}{y}^{\text {t }}$ they wolde lende them their ordinaunce, for they had moch. So the children of Iambry came out $\boldsymbol{B}$ of Madaba, a toke Ihon $\tau$ all $\dot{\ddagger}$ he had, a wente their waye withall. Then came worde vnto Ionathas a Symon his brother, $\frac{\dot{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ the children of Iambri made a greate mariage, a brought $\stackrel{8}{\mathrm{y}}$ bryde from Madaba with greate pompe: for she was doughter to one of the noblest prynces of Canaan. Wherfore they remembred the bloude of Ihon their brother, and wente rp, and hyd them selues vnder the shadowe of the mountayne.

So they lift vp their eyes, and loked: and beholde, there was moch a doo, a greate repayre: for the brydegrome came forth, a his fredes and his brethren met them with tympanys, instrumentes of musick, and many weapes. Then Ionathas and they that were with him, rose out of their skoukinge places agaynst them, and slewe many of them. As. for the remmaunt, they fled in to $\mathrm{y}^{\circ}$ mountaynes, and they toke all their substaunce. Thus the mariage was turned to mournynge, and $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ noyse of their melody in to lamentacion. And so when they had auenged the bloude of their brother, they turned agayne vnto Iordane.

Bachides hearinge this, came vnto $\dot{y}$ very border of Iordane with a greate power vpon the Sabbath daye. And Ionathas sayde to his company: let vs get vp, © fyght agaynst oure enemies: for it stondeth not with vs to daye, as in tymes past: Beholde, oure enemies are in oure waye, $\stackrel{\ominus}{y}$ water of Iordane ypon the one syde of vs, with banckes, fennes and woddes of $\dot{y}$ other syde, so $\dot{f}$ there is no place for vs to departe vito. ${ }^{6}$ Wherfore crie now vato heauen, that ye maye be delyuered from the power of youre enemies. So they stroke the batell. And Ionathas stretched out his honde to smyte Bachides, but he fled bacwarde. Then Ionathas and they $\stackrel{t}{y}$ were with him leapte in to lordane, a swymmed ouer Iordane ruto him, t there were slayne of Bachides syde that daye, a thousande men.

Therfore Bachides with his hoost turned againe to Ierusalem, a buylte sp ẙ castels a stronge holdes that were in Iewry, Iericho, Emaus, Bethoron, Bethel, Thānata, Phara a Thopo, with hye walles, with portes a with lockes: $\mathbb{\pi}$ set men to kepe them, $\frac{t}{y}$ they might Afterwarde in the C.liij. yeare in the seconde moneth, Alcimus eomaunded, that $\hat{y}$ walles of the ynmost Sanctuary shulde be destroyed, a the buyldinges of $\hat{y}$ prophetes also. And when he beganne to destroye the , $\dot{y}$ thinges $\frac{t}{y}$ he wēte aboute, were hyndered:

So they wète a gaue Bachides this councell, which arose to come with a greate hoost, a sent letters priuely to his adherentes which were in Iewry, to take Ionathas a those $\frac{t}{y}$ were with him: but they might not, for the other had gotten knowlege of their deuyce. And Ionathas toke L. men of the countre (which were the ryngleders of them) a slewe them. Then Ionathas and Symon with their copany departed rnto the cite Bethbessen, which lieth in the wyldernesse, and repayred the decaye therof, $\pi$ made it stronge. When Bachides knewe this, he gathered all his hoost, and sent worde to them that were of lewry. The came he and layed sege to Bethbessen, and fought against it a longe season, and made instrumentes of warre.
( $\mathcal{A}$ Now Ionathas lefte his brother Symon in the cite, and wente forth himself in to the countre, and came with a certayne nombre, and slewe Odares and his brethren and the children of Phaseron in their tentes: so $\frac{\mathfrak{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ he beganne to be stronge, $\pi$ to increase in power.

As for Symon and his company, they wente out of the cite, and brēt vp the instrumētes of warre, and fought agaynst Bachides, and discōfited him. And Baehides was sore vexed, because his councell and trauayle was in vayne. Wherfore he was wroth at $\dot{y}$ wicked men (that gaue him councell to come in to their londe) and slew many of them. Then purposed he with his company to go awaye in to his owne countre: wherof whe Ionathas had knowlege, he sent embassitours vnto him, for to make peace with him, a $\stackrel{t}{\mathrm{y}}$ he shulde deliuer him his presoners againe. To the which Bachides cosented gladly, and dyd acordinge to his desyre: yee and made an ooth, that he shulde neuer do him harme all the dayes of his life. So he restored vnto him all the presoners that he had taken out of the londe of Iuda, and the turned and wente his waye in to his owne londe, nether proceded he eny further to come vnto $\mathfrak{y}$ borders of Iuda. Thus Israel had no more warre. And Ionathas dwelt at Machmas, and beganne there to gouerne the people, and destroyed the angodly men out of Israel.

IN the C.lx. yeare came Alexander y sonne of noble "Antiochus, and toke Ptolomais, whose eitisens receaued him, and there he raigned. When Demetrius herde therof, he gathered an exceadinge greate hoost, and wēte forth agaynst him to fight. Wherfore Demetrius sent letters vnto Ionathas with louynge wordes, and praysed him greatly. For he sayde: we wyll first make peace with him, before he bynde him selfe with Alexander agaynst rs: els he shall remembre the euell that we haue done against him, his brother t his people. ${ }^{b}$ And so he gaue Ionathas leue to gather an hoost, to make weapens, and to be confederate with him, and commaunded the pledges that were in the castell, to be delyuered mito him.

Then eame Ionathas to Ierusalem, and red the letters in the audience of all the people, and of them that were in ${ }^{\circ}$ castell. And therfore were they sore afrayed, because they herde, that the kynge had geue him licence to gather an hoost. Thus were the pledges delyuered vnto Ionathas, which restored them to their elders. Ionathas also dwelt at Ierusalem, and begāne to buylde vp and to repayre the cite: commaundinge the worke men, to wall it, and the mount Sion rounde aboute with fre stone, to be a stronge holde, and so Onely at Bethsura remayned certayne of the lewes, which had forsaken the lave and comandementes of God, for Bethsura was their refinge.

Now when kynge Alexander herde of $\dot{y}$ promises $\dot{f}$ Demetrius had made vito Ionathas, and when it was tolde him of $f$ batels and noble actes, which he and his brethren had done, and of the greate tramayles that they had taken: he saide: where shal we fyute soch a man? wel, we will make him oure fremke, a be confederate with him. ${ }^{\text {a }}$ But when Ionathas and the people herde these wordes, they gaue no credence unto them, nether receaued them: for they remembred the greate wickednesse that he had done vnto Israel, and how sore he had vexed them. Wherfore they agreed vnto Alexander, for he was a prynce that had dealte frendly with them, and so they stode by him allwaye. Thē gathered kynge Alexāder a greate hoost, and brought his armye agaynst Demetrius. So y two kynges stroke battayll together, ${ }^{b}$ but Demetrius hoost fled, and Alexander folowed after and fell vpon them. A mightie sore felde was it, continuynge till the Sonne wente downe, and Demetrius was slayne the same daye.

And Alexander sente embassitours vnto Ptolomy the kynge of Egipte with these wordes, sayenge : For so moch as I am come agayne to iny realme, and am set in the trone of my progenitours, and haue gotten the dominion, ouer come Demetrius, conquered the londe, and striken a felde with him, so that we haue discomfited both him and his hoost, and syt in the trone of his kyngdome: Let vs now make frendshipe together, geue me thy daughter to wife: so shall I be thy sonne in lawe, and both geue the rewardes, and hir greate dignite. Ptolony the kynge gaue answere, sayenge: Happy be the daye wherin thou art come agayne to the londe of thy progenitours, and set in the trone of their kyngdome. And now will I fulfill thy writynge: but mete me at Ptolomais, $\stackrel{\imath}{y}$ we maye se one another, and that I maye mary my doughter unto the acordinge to thy desyre. So Ptolemy wēte out of Egipte with his doughter Cleopatra, © came vuto Ptolomais in $\hat{y}^{\circ}$ Clxij. yeare: where kynge Alexāder met him, a he gaue Alexander his doughter Cleopatra, and maried them at Ptolomais with greate worshipe, like as the maner of kynges is to be.

Then wrote kynge Alexander vito Ionathas, that he shulde come and mete him. So he wente honorably nito Ptolomais, r there he met the two kinges, and gaue them greate presentes of golde and syluer, a founde fauoure in their sight. And there came together agaynst Ionathas certayne wicked men and vngracious personnes of Israel, makynge complayntes of him, but the kynge regarded them not. As for Ionathas, the kynge commaunded to take of his garmentes, and to clothe him in purple: and so they dyd. 'Then the kynge appoynted him to syt by him, and sayde vnto lis prynces: Go with him in to the myddest of the cite, and make a proclamacion, that no man complayne agaynst him of eny matter, and that no man trouble him for eny maner of cause.

So it happened that when his accusers sawe the worshipe which was proclamed of him, a ${ }^{t}$ he was clothed in purple: they fled euerychone. And the kynge made moch of him, wrote him amonge his chefe frendes, made him a duke, and partaker of his dominion. Thus Ionathas wente agayne to Ierusalem with peace and gladnesse. ${ }^{6}$ In the Clxv. yeare came Demetrius the sonne of Demetrius from Creta in to his fathers londe: wherof when Alcxander herde tell, he was right sory, and returned vito Antioche. And Demetrius chose ${ }^{d}$ Appollonius (which had the gouernaunce of Celosyria) to be his captayne.

So he gathered a greate hoost and came rnto Iamnia, and sende worde vnto Ionathas the hye prest, sayenge: Darrest thou withstonde vs thy self alone? As for me, I am but laughed to scorne and shamed, because thou prouest thy strength agaynst is in the mountaynes. Now therfore, yf thou trustest in thyne owne strength, come downe to is in to the playne felde, aud there let vs proue oure strength together: thou shalt fynde, that I haue valeaunt men of warre with me: and shalt knowe who I am, © the other that stonde by me.

Which saye, that youre fote is not able to stonde before oure face, for thy fathers haue bene twyse chaced in to their owne londe. And now, how wylt thou be able to abyde so greate an hoost of horsmen and fotemen in the felde, where as is nether rocke, stone ner place to fle vnto?

When Ionathas herde the wordes of $A_{p}$ pollonius, he was moued in his mynde: wherfore he chose x . thousande men and wente out of Ierusalem, and Synon his brother met him for to helpe him: Aud they pitched their tentes at Ioppa, but the cite kepte him forth, for Ioppa was an holde of Appollonius. Then lonathas layed sege to it, and they that were in the cite, for very feare let him in: and so Ionathas wanne Ioppa. Appollonius hearinge of this, toke thre thousande horsmen, with a greate hoost of fote, and wente as though he wolde go to Azotus, a came Immediatly in to the playne folde: because he had so many horsmé, and put his trust in the'. So lonathas folowed upon him to Azotus, a there they stroke the battayll. Now had Appollonius left a M. horsmen behynde them pryuely in the tetes. And when Ionathas knewe that soch waite was layed behynde them, they wēte rounde aboute the enemies hoost, and shot dartes at the people from the mornynge to the euenynge. As for Ionathas people, they kepte their ordre as he had commaunded them, $\tau$ the enemies horses were euer labouringe.

Then brought Symon forth his hoost, and set them agaynst the fote men. For the horsmé were weery allready. So he discomfited them, and they fled. And they that were scatred in the felde, gat them to Azotus, and came in to the temple of Dagon their Idol, $\dot{y}$ they might there saue their lyues. But Ionathas set fyre vpon Azotus and all the cities rounde aboute it, a toke their gookes, and brēt up the temple of Dagon with all them that were fled in to it.

Thus were slayne and brēt well nye viij. thousande men. So lonathas remoned the hoost from thence, and brought them to Ascalon: where $f$ men of the cite came forth, and met him with greate worshipe. After this wente Ionathas and his hoost agayne to lerusalem, with greate substaunce of good. And when kynge Alexander herde these thinges, he thought to do Ionathas more worshipe, a sent him a colar of golde, as the vse is to be geuen unto soch as are of the kynges nexte bloude. lie gane him also $y$ cite of Acearon (with the londes belongynge therto) in possession.

from Samaria) a all $\dot{y}$ lōdes pertayninge there vnto, to be frely separated for soch as do sacrifice in Ierusale: both concernynge the paymétes which the kynge toke yearly afore tyme, a $\dot{y}$ frutes also of the earth i trees. As for other tithes tributes $\frac{\dot{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ belonged vnto vs, we discharge the therof from this tyme forth. In like maner we graūte vnto the all the customes of salt and crowne taxes, which were brought vnto vs. And this fredome shal they haue firme a stedfast, fro this tyme forth for euermore. Therfore se $y^{t}$ ye make a copy of these oure letters, and delyuer it vnto Ionathas: that it maye be kepte ypon $\hat{y}$ holy mount in a cōuenient place.

After this, when Demetrius the kynge sawe that his londe was in rest, and that no resistaunce was made him: he sent awaye all his hoost euery man to his owne place, excepte an armye of straungers, whom he brought from the Iles of the Heithen, wherfore all his fathers hoost had euell wyll at him. Now was there one Triphon ' (that had bene of Alexanders parte afore) which when he sawe that all the hoost murmured agaynst Demetrius: he wente to Emalcuel the Arabian (that brought vp Antiochus the sonne of Alexander) and laye sore 'pon him, to delyuer him this yonge Antiochus: that he might raigne in his fathers steade. He tolde him also what greate euell Demetrius had done, $t$ how his me of ware loued him not: a so remayned there a loge season.

And Ionathas sent vito kynge Demetrius, to druye them out which were in the castell at Ierusalem and in the other refugies, for they dyd Isracl greate harme. So Demetrius sent worde vinto Ionathas, sayenge: I wil not only do these thinges for the and thy people, but at tyme conueniet I wil do both the $r$ thy people greate worshipe. But now thou shalt do me a pleasure, of thou wilt sende me men to helpe me: for all myne armye is gone fro me. So Ionathas sent him iij. M. stronge men vnto Antioche, and they came vnto the kynge, wherfore the kynge was very glad at their commynge. But they that were of the cite (enen an Cxx. thousande mē) gathered them together, t wolde haue slayne the kynge, which fled in to his courte: a the citesyns kepte the stretes of the eite, and beganne to fight.
c 1 Mac. 12. e.

Then the kynge called for the lewes helpe, which cante vito him all together, a wente abrole thorow the cite, and slewe the same daye an C. M. men: set fyre pon the cite, gat many spoyles in that daye, and delyuered ỳnge. So when the citesins sawe that the lewes had gotten their wyll of the cite, and they them selues dispoynted of their purpose: they made their supplicacion vnto the kynge, sayege: Graunte rs peace, and let the lewes ceasse from troublinge vs and the cite, and ypon this they cast awaye their weapens. Thus they made peace, and $\hat{y}$ Iewes gat greate worshipe in the sight of the kynge, and in the sight of all that were in his realme, and were spoken of thorow out the kyngdome: and so they came agayne to Ierusalem with greate goodes.

So the kynge Demetrius sat in the trone of his kyngdome, and had peace in his lode. Nenertheles he dyssembled in all that euer he spake, $\tau$ with drewe himself from Ionathas, nether rewarded him acordinge to the benefites which he had done for him, but troubled him very sore. After this came Triphon agayne with yonge Antiochus, which raigned T was crowned kynge. Then there gathered vnto him all $\dot{y}$ men of warre, whō Demetrius had put awaye: these fought agaynst Demetrius, which fled a turned his backe. So Triphon toke the Elephantes, a wanne Antioche. And yoge Antiochus wrote vito Ionathas, sayenge: I confirme the in thy presthode, a make $\underset{y}{f}$ ruler of iiij. countrees, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ thou marest be a frende of y kinges.

Ypon this he sent him golden vessel to be serued in, and gaue him leue to drynke in golde, to be clothed in purple, and to weere a colar of golde. He made his brother Symon also captayne, from the coostes of Tyrus vuto the borders of Egipte. Then lonathas toke his iourney, a wente thorow $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ cities beyode the water (of lordane) and all the men of warre of Syria gathered the vnto him for to helpe him. So he came vnto Ascalon, and they of the cite receaued him honorably: a from thence wente he vnto Gaza, but they wolde not let him in : wherfore he layed sege into it, burnynge vp and spoylinge the places that were aboute the eite.
in) And the citesyns of Gaza submytted the selues nuto lonathas, which made peace with [^944]them, but toke of their somnes to pledge, sent the to lerusale, a wente thorow the countre vnto Damascus. Now when lonathas herde that Demetrius princes were come in to Cates (which is in Galilee) with a greate hoost, purposinge to put Demetrius out from medlinge in the realine: he came agaynst them, and lefte Symon his brother in the londe: which came to Bethsura, and layed sege to it a longe season, and discomfited them. So they desyred to haue peace with him, which he graunted them, a afterwarde put them out from thence, toke the cite, and set me to kepe it. And Ionathas with his hoost came to the water of Genesar, a by tymes in the mornynge gat them to the playne felde of Azor.

And beholde, the hoostes of the Heithen met the in the felde, a layed watch for the in the mountaynes: so $\frac{t}{y}$ when Ionathas came agaynst the, the other (which were layed to watch) rose out of their places, a fought, a they that were of Ionathas syde, fled euery man: a there was not one of the lefte, excepte Matathias the sonne of Absalomus, and ludas the sonne of Calphi the captayne of the hoost. The Ionathas rente his clothes, layed earth ypo his heade, made his prayer, a turned againe to thē in $y$ felde: where they fought together, and he put them to flight. Now when his owne mē $\stackrel{t}{y}$ were fled, sawe this : they turned agayne vnto him, a helped him to folowe vpon all their enemies vito their tentes at Cades. So there were slayne of the Heithen the same daye, iij. M. men, a Ionathas turned agayne to Ierusalem.

IONATHAS seynge that $\dot{y}$ tyme was mete for him, chose certayne men and sent them Finto Rome for to stablish to renue the frendshipe with the. ${ }^{a} \mathrm{He}$ sent lettres also mnto Sparta, and to other places in like maner. So they wite snto Rome and entred in to $\dot{y}$ councell, a sayde: Ionathas $\mathfrak{y}$ hye prest a the people of the lewes sent vs vito you, for to remue $\mathfrak{y}$ olde frēdshipe and bonde of loue. Vpō this ${ }^{\circ}$ Romaynes gaue the fre pasportes, $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ mé shulde lede the home in to y lōde of Iuda peaceably. And this is $\mathfrak{y}$ copy of the lettres that Ionathas wrote mnto the Sparcians:

Ionathas $\mathfrak{y}$ hye prest with ${ }^{\circ}$ elders, prestes, I the other people of $\stackrel{y}{y}$ lewes, sende gretinge vito $\frac{\mathrm{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ Sparciās their brethrē. There were lettres sente loge agoo vnto Onias ŷ hye prest, from Arius which than raigned amonge you: that ye are oure brethren, as the wrytinge made thervpon specifieth. And Onias intreated the embassitoure that was sent, honorably, and receaued $\frac{8}{y}$ lettres: wherin there was mencion made of the bonde of loue a frendshipe. But as for vs, we nede no soch writinges: for why, we haue the holy bokes of scripture in oure hondes to oure comforte. Neuerthelesse we had rather sende vnto you, for the renuynge of y brotherhode and frendshipe: lest we shulde be straunge vnto you, for it is longe, sens $\frac{\mathrm{g}}{\mathrm{g}}$ tyme $\stackrel{t}{\mathrm{y}}$ ye sent worde vnto vs. Wherfore in $\frac{\dot{y}}{}$ sacrifices $\dot{y}^{t}$ we offre t other ceremonies vpon $y$ yye solempne dayes and other we allwaye remembre you without ceassynge (like as reason is, and as it becommeth vs to thynke vpon oure brethren) yee and are right glad of youre prosperous honoure.

And though we haue had greate troubles and warres, so that the kynges aboute vs haue foughten agaynst vs: yet wolde we not be greuous vnto you ner to other of oure louers and frendes in these warres. For we haue had helpe frō heaue $\overline{\text {, }}$, so that we are delyuered, and oure enemies subdued. Wherfore we ehose Numenius the sonne of Antiochus and Antipater the sonne of Iason, and sente them vito the Romaynes, for to renue the olde bonde of frendshipe and loue with them. We eommaunded them also to come mito you, to salute you, and to delyuer you oure lettres, concerninge the renouacion of oure brotherhode. And now ye shal do right wel, to geue vs an answere there vnto.

And this is the copy of the wrytinge, which Arius the kynge of Sparta sente vnto Onias: Arius kinge of the Sparcians sendeth gretynge vnto Onias the hye prest. It is founde in wrytynge, that the Spareians and Iewes are brethren, and come of the generacion of Abraham. And now for so moch as this is come to oure knowlege, ye shal do wel, to wryte vato vs of youre prosperite. As for vs, we haue wrytten oure mynde vnto you: Oure catell and goodes are yours and yours, ours. These thinges haue we comaunded to be shewed vnto you.

When Ionathas herde, that Demetrius prices were come forth to fight against him with a greater hoost thē afore, he wente fro Ierusalem, a met the in the lode of Hemath, for he gaue them not space to come in to his owne countre. And he sent spyes vnto their tentes, which came agayne and tolde him, that they were appoynted to come vpō him in the night season. Wherfore when the Söne was gone downe, Ionathas cōmaunded his men to wateh all $\dot{y}$ night, $\mathbb{t}$ to be ready with weapens for to fight: and set watehmen rounde aboute the hoost. But when the aduersaries herde that Ionathas was ready with his men to the battayll, they feared © were afrayed in their hertes, a kyndled fyres in their tentes, brake vp , and gat them awaye. Neuertheles Ionathas and his company knewe it not till the morninge, for they sawe the fyres burnynge.

Then Ionathas folowed ypon thē, but he might not ouertake them, for they were gone ouer the water Eleutherus. So Ionathas departed vnto $\dot{f}$ Arabiās (which were called Zabadei) slewe them, a toke their goodes. He proceded furthur also, and came vnto Damaseus, a wente thorow all that countre. But Simon his brother toke his iourney and came to Ascalon and to the nexte stronge holdes: departinge vnto Ioppa, and wanne it. For he herde, that they wolde stonde of Demetrius partie : wherfore he sent me of warre in the eite, to kepe it. After this came Ionathas home agayne, a called the elders of the people together: and denysed with the for to buylde ap the stroge holdes in Iewry, and the walles of Ierusalem, to set vp an hye wall betwixte the eastell and $\dot{y}$ cite, for to separate it from the cite, that it might be afone, and that men shulde nether bye nor sell in it.

Vpo this they came together for to buylde vp the cite: and for so moch as the wall vpo the broke of the west syde (called Caphetheta) was fatlen downe, they repayred it. And Symon set rp Adiada in Sephela, and made it stronge, settinge portes at lockes rpō it. ${ }^{\text {a }}$ Now when Triphon purposed to raigne in Asia, to be erowned, and to slaye the kynge Antiochus: he was afrayed that Ionathas wolde not suffre him, but fight against him. Wherfore he wente aboute to take Ionathas, and to kyll him.

So he departed, and came vnto Bethsan. Then wente Ionathas forth against him to the battayll with fourtye thousande chosen men, and eame vito Bethsan also. But whē
${ }^{a} 1$ Ma. 11. c. Iosephus capi. 19. libro 13.
(Triphon sawe that lonathas came with so greate an hoost to destroye him, he was afrayed: and therfore he receaued him honorably, commended him roto all his freudes, gave him rewardes, and conmaunded his men of warre to be as obectiet vuto him as to himedf.

And saide rnto Jonathas: why hast thou caused this people to take soch tranayle, seynge there is no warre betwixte vs?' Therfore sende them home agayne, t chose certaine mé to waite rpon the, I come thou with me to Ptolonain: for I wil geue it the, with the other strige holdes, men of warre and their oflieers: Is for me, I must departe, this is df ouly ${ }^{\circ}$ cause of my comynge. lonathas belened him, $\tau$ dyd as he sayde, puttinge awaye his hoost, which wente in to $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ londe of Iuda. He kepte but iij. M. by him, wherof he sente ij. M. in to Galilee, a one M. wente with himself.

Now soone as Ionathas entred in to Ptolomai, the citesyns sparred the gates of the cite, and toke him, and slewe all them with the swerde, that came in with him. Then sent Triphon an hoost of fote me and horsmen in to Galilee and in to the greate playne felde, to destroye all Ionathas company. But when they knew that Ionathas was taken, and all they slayne that wayted ypon him : they toke coancell together, and cane forth ready to the battayll. So when they which folowed rpon them. sawe, that it was a matter of life, they turned backe agayne. As for the other, they wente in to $\mathfrak{y}$ londe of Iuda peaceably, $\mathfrak{a}$ bewayled lonathas, a them that were with him right sore. And lsrael made greate Iamentacion. The all the Heithen $\mathrm{y}^{\mathrm{y}}$ were rounde aboute them, sought to destroye the. l'or they sayde: now have they no captayne, nor eny man to helpe them. 'Therfore let vs ouercome them, and rote out their name from amonge men.

${ }^{3} \mathrm{~N}$TOW whan Symon herde that Triphon grathered a greate hoost, to come in to $\hat{y}$ lonte of Iudis, and to destroye it: and sawe ${ }^{t}$ the people was in greate fearfulnesse and care: He came rp to lerusalem, and gathered the perple together, $\tau$ gaue the exortacion, sayenge: Ye knowe what greate battayls 1 and my brethren $\tau$ my fathers house have stryken for the lawe $x$ the Sactuary, and what maner of troubles we haue sene: thorow occasion wherof, all my brethren are slayne for Israels sake, and I am left alone. ${ }^{a}$ And now let not me spare myne owne life in eny maner of trouble, for I am no better then my brethren: but wil avenge my people and the Sanctuary, oure children and oure wyues: for all the Heithen are gathered together, to destroye vs of very malice.

At these wordes the hartes of the people were kyndled together, so that they cried with a loude voyce, sayenge: Thou shalt be oure eaptayne in steade of Iudas a Ionathas thy brethren, ordre thou oure batell, a what so euer thou commaundest vs, we shall do it. So he gathered all the men of warre, makinge haist to fynish all the walles of lerusalem, which he made stronge rounde aboute. Then sent he lonathas the sonne of Absalomus with a fresh hoost vnto Ioppa, which droue them out $\dot{y}$ were in the castell, and remayned there himself. Triphon also remoued from Ptolomais with a greate armye, to come in to the londe of Iuda, and İonathas with him in warde. And Simon pitched his tentes at Addus before the playne felde.

But when Triphon knewe that Symon stode vp in steade of his brother lonathas, and that he wolde warre agaynst him: he sent messaungers suto him, sayenge : Where as we have kepte Ionathas thy brother, it is for money that he is owynge in the kynges accompte, concernynge the busynesse $\dot{y}$ he had in honde. Wherfore sende now an C. taletes of syluer and his two sonnes for suertie, that when he is lette forth he shal not forsake rs: and we shal sende him agayne. Neuerthelesse Symon knewe, that he dyssembled in his wordes: yet commaunded he the money a children to be delyuered rnto him: lest he shulde be the greater enemye agaynst $\stackrel{f}{y}$ people of Israel, and saye: because he sent him not the money and the children, therfore is Ionathas deed.

So Symon sent him the children and an hundreth talentes, but he dyssembled, a wolde not let Ionathas go. Afterwarde came Triphon in to the londe, to destroye it, and wente rounde aboute by the waye, $\frac{t}{y}$ ledeth wnto Ador. But where so euer they wente, thither wente Symon and his hoost also. Now they that were in the castell, sent messaungers vnto Triphon, that he shulde make haist to come by the wyldernesse, and to sende them vytales: And Triphon made ready all his horsmen to come that same night. Neuerthelesse it was a very greate snowe, so that he came not in Galaadithim. And whē he drewe nye Baschama, he slewe Ionathas and his sonnes there, and then turned for to go home in to his owne londe.

The sente Symon for to fet his brothers deed coarse, and buried it in Modin his fathers cite. So all Israel bewayled him with greate lamentacion, and mourned for him very longe. And Symon made vpon the sepulere of his father and his brethrē a buyldynge hye to loke vinto of fre stone behynde and before: and set yp seuen pylers, one agaynst another (for his father, his mother and foure brethren) and set greate pilers rounde aboute, with armes vpon them for a perpetuall memory, and carued shippes besyde the arnnes: ${ }_{y}^{t}$ they might be sene of me saylinge in the see. This sepulere which he made at Modin, stondeth yet into this daye.
${ }^{a}$ Now as Tripho wente forth to walke with y yoge kynge Antiochus, he slewe him trayterously, and raigned in his steade, crowned himself kynge of Asia, and dyd moch euell in the londe. Symon also buylte vp the eastels in Iewry, makynge them stronge with hye towres, greate walles, portes and lockes, and layed vp vytales in the stronge holdes. And Symon chose certayne men, and sente them to kynge Demetrius: to desyre him, ${ }_{y}^{t}$ he wolde diseharge the londe from all bondage, for Triphon had spoyled it rery sore. Where ypon Demetrius the kynge answered him, a wrote vito him after this maner:

Demetrius ${ }^{\circ}$ kige sendeth gretinge vnto Symon the hye prest his frende, with the elders and people of the Iewes. The golden crowne and precious stone $\stackrel{t}{y}$ ye sente vnto vs , haue we receaned: and are ready to make a stedfast peace with you, yee and to wryte vnto oure officers, for to release you, concernynge the thinges wherin we made you fre: and the appoyntment $\stackrel{t}{y}$ we make with you, shalbe firme and stable. The stronge holdes which ye haue buylded, shalbe youre owne. As for eny ouer sight or fawte committed vnto this daye, we forgeue it, and the crome [^945]taxe that ye ought vs also. And where as was eny other tribute in Ierusalem, it shal now be no tribute: and loke who are mete amonge you to be in oure courte, let them be written $\mathrm{v} p$, that there maye be peace betwixte vs.

Thus the yock of the Heithen was taken from Israel, in the hundreth and seuentie yeare. And the peple of the Iewes beganne to write in their lettres and actes on this maner: ${ }^{b}$ In $\mathfrak{y}$ first yeare of Symon the hye prest, and prynce of the Iewes.

In those dayes wente Symon rnto Gaza, and beseged it rounde aboute, where he set vp ordinaunce of warre. And wanne a towre, which he toke. So they that gat in to the towre leapte into the cite, which was in a greate feare: In so moeh that the people of the cite rente their elothes, and clymmed yp ypon the walles with their wyues and children, besekynge Symon to be at one with them, sayenge:

O rewarde vs not after oure wickednes, but be graeious vnto us, and we shal do $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ seruyee. Then Symon for very pite, wolde fight nomore agaynst them, but put them out of the cite, and caused the houses (wherin the ymages were) to be clensed: and so entred the eite tith Psalmes of prayse, geuinge thankes wnto the LORDE. So when he had east all abhominacios out of the cite, he set soch men in it as kepte the lawe of God, and made the cite stronge, and builded a dwellinge place for himself.

Now when they in the castell at Ierusalem were kepte so strately, that they conde not come forth ner in to countre, and might nether bye ner sell: they were very hungrie, and many of them famished to death: In so moch that they besought Symon to be at one with them, which he gramited them. So he put them out from thence, and elensed the eastell from fylthynesse. Aud ypon the xxiij. daye of the seconde moneth in the Clxxj. yeare they entred in to it with thankesgeuynge and braunches of palme trees, with harpes, crowdes, eymbals, and lutes, synginge psalmes and songes of prayse vito God, for that the greate enemy of Israel was ouer come.

And Symon ordened that the same daye shulde be kepte euery yeare in gladnesse, and made stronge the hyll of the temple that

${ }^{1}$N the Clxxij. yeare gathered kynge Demetrius his hoost, and departed vnto Media. to gett him helpe for to fight agaynst Triphon. Now when Arsaces the kynge of l'ersia and Media herde, that Demetrius was entred within his borders: he sente one of his prynces to take him alyue, and to brynge him snto him. So he wente and slewe Demetrius hoost, toke himselfe, brought him to Arsaces, which kepte him in warde. And all the londe of Iuda was in rest, so longe as Synon lyued: for he sought the wealth of his people, therfore were they glad to haue him for their ruler, and to do him worshipe allwaye.

Symon wanne the cite of Ioppa also for an hauen towne, and made it an intraunce in to the Iles of the see. He enlarged the borders of his people, and cōquered them more londe: He gathered up many of their people that were presoners: he had the dominio of Gaza, Bethsura and the castell, which he clensed from fylthines, and there was no mā that resisted him: So that euery man tylled his grounde in peace, the londe of Iuda and the trees gaue their frute and encreace. The elders sat all in iudgment, and toke their deuyce for the wealth of the londe : the yonge men put on worshipe and harnesse tpon them. He prourded vytayles for the cities, and made goodly stronge holdes of them : so that the fame of his worshipe was spoken of vnto the ende of $y$ yorlde. " For he made peace thorow out the londe, and Israel was full of myrth and iove.

Euery mã sat vnder his vyne $\mathbb{q}$ fyge trees and there was no man to fraye them awaye. There was none in $\hat{y}$ londe to fight agaynst them, for then the kinges were ouer come. He helped those that were in aduersite lamonge his people, he was diligent to se $\dot{y}$ lawe kepte: as for soch as were vingodly and wicked he toke the awaye. He set rp $\dot{y}$ Sanctuary, $\tau$ encreased the holy vessels of the temple.

When $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ Romaynes and Spareians had gotten worde, $\frac{t}{y}$ lonathas was deed, they were right sory. But when they herde $\frac{\mathfrak{y}}{}$ Symon his brother was made hye prest in his steade, and how he had wonne the londe agayne with the cities in it: they wrote vnto him in tables of laton, to renue the frendshipe a bonde of loue, which they had made afore with Iudas a lonathas his brethre.. ${ }^{\circ}$ Which writinges were red before the congregacion at Ierusalem.

And this is the copy of the lettres, that the $\mathbb{C}$ Sparcians sent: The Senatours and citesyns of Sparta sende gretinge rnto Simō ýg greate prest with the elders, prestes, © y other people of the lewes their brethre: Whe youre embassitours that were sente vnto oure people, certified vs of youre worshipe, honoure and prosperous wealth: we were glad of their cöminge, and haue written the earande which they spake before the councell of the people: namely, that Numenius the sonne of Antiochus, and Antipater the sonne of Iason the Iewes embassitours are come vnto vs, for to renue the olde frendshipe with vs. Vpon this the people consented, that the men shulde be honorably intreated, and that the copy of their earande shulde be written in the speciall bokes of the people, for a perpetuall memory rnto the Sparcians: yee and that we shulde sende a copy of the same mnto Symon the greate prest.

After this dyd Symon sende Numenius vnto Rome, with a golden shylde of a thousande pounde weight, to confirme the frendshipe with them : which when the Romaynes mnderstode, they saide: what thākes shal we recompence agayne unto Symon © his children? For he hath stablished his brethrē, and ouer come the enemies of Israel. Wherfore they graũted him to be fre. And all this wrote the Iewes in tables of laton, and naled it snto the pilers spon the mount Siou. The copy of the writinge is this:
The xriij. daye of $\dot{y}$ moneth Elul in the Clxsij. yeare in the thirde yeare of Symon the hye prest, in the greate congregacion of $\dot{y}$ prestes, rulers of the people, and elders of the countre at Asaramel, were these wordes openly declared:

After that wolde their enemies haue trodden their holy thinges vnder fote, destroyed their londe, and vtterly waisted their Sanctuary. Then Symon withstode them, and fought for his people, spent moch of his owwe money, weapened the valeaunt men of his people, gaue them wages, made stronge $\dot{f}$ cities of Iuda, with Bethsura that lieth vpon the borders of Iewry, (where the ordinaunce of their enemies laye somtyme) a set lewes there for to kepe it.

And kynge Demetrius confirmed him in his hye presthode, made him his frende, and dyd him greate worshipe. For he herde that the Romayns called $\dot{y}$ Iewes their frendes, louers and brethren: how honorably they receaued Symons embassitours: how $\dot{f}$ Iewes and prestes consented that he shulde be their prynce and hye prest perpetually (till God raysed up the true prophet) and that he shulde be their captayne, to care for the Sanctuary, and to set officers vpon the workes therof, ouer the londe, ouer the weapens, ouer the houses of defence, to make prouysion for the holy thynges, and to be obeyed of euery man, and all the writynges of $\dot{y}$ londe to be made in his name: that he shulde be clothed in purple and golde, and that it shulde be laufull for none of the people nor prestes to breake eny of these thynges, to withstonde his wordes, ner to call eny congregacion in the londe without him: that he shulde be clothed in purple, and weere a colar of golde: And yf there were eny which disobeyed or brake this ordinaunce, that he shulde be punyshed.

So all the people consented to alowe Symon, and to do acordynge to these wordes. Symon also himself toke it vpon him, and was contente to be the hye prest, the captayme and prynce of the Iewes and prestes, and to gouerne them all. And they commaunded to make this writinge in tables of laton, and to fasten it vnto the compasse of the Sanctuary in an open place: and to laye vp a copy of the same in the treasury, that Symon and his posterite might haue it.

(T)e fu. (b)apter.

MOROUER, kynge Antiochus the sonne of Demetrius sente lettres from the Iles of the see, vnto Symon the hye prest and prynce of the Iewes, and to all the people, conteyninge these wordes: Antiochus the kynge sendeth gretinge vnto Symon the hye prest and to the people of the Iewes. For so moch as certayne wicked men have gotten the kyngdome of oure progenitours, I am purposed to chalenge the realme agayne, and to restore it to the olde estate.

Wherfore I haue gathered a greate hoost and made shyppes of warre: that I maye go thorow the eountre, and be auenged of them which haue destroyed oure londe, and waysted many cities in my realme. And therfore now I make the fre also from all the tributes, wherof all kynges my progenitours haue discharged the, and from other customes (wher from they haue released the) what so euer they be: Yee I geue the leane to smyte money of thine owne within thy londe. As for Ierusalem, I wil that it be holy and fre : and all the weapens and houses of defence which thou hast buylded and kepest in thine hondes, shal be thine. Where as eny thinge is or shal be owynge unto the kynge, I forgeue it the, from this time forth for euermore. And when we haue optayned oure kyngdome, we shal do the thy people and the temple greate worshipe: so that youre honoure shal be knowne thorow out $\hat{y}$ whole worlde.

In the Clxsiiii. yeare wente Antiochus in to his fathers londe, and all the men of warre came together vito him, so that fewe were left with Triphon. So the kynge Antiochus folowed ypon him, but he fled suto Dora, which lieth hy the see syde: for he sawe $\dot{y}$ there was mysehefe comminge vnto him, and that his hoost had forsaken lim. Then came Antiochus suto Dora with an hūdreth $\tau$ twentye thonsaule men of armes vpon fote, and eight thousaude horsmen. So he compased the cite rounde abonte, and $\hat{y}$ shippes came by the see. Thus they rexed the cite by londe and by water, in so moch that they suffred ne man to go in nor out.
${ }^{n}$ In the meane season came Numenius ( $\pi$ they that had bene with him) from the cite of Rome, hanynge lettres written vito the kynges and prousucies, wherin were conteyned $\mathfrak{C}$ these wordes: Lucius the Mayre of Rome sendeth gretinge vnto Ptolomy the kynge. The enthassitours of the Iewes oure fredes beinge sent from Symon the hye prest and from the people of the Iewes, came unto us, for to renue the olde frendshipe and bonde of loue, and brought a shylde of golde weyenge a thonsande pounde, which we were contente to receane of then. Wherfore we thought it good to wryte vito the kynges $\mathbb{a}$ prouincies, to do them no harme, nor to take parte agaynst thé, their eities ner countrees nether to mayntene their enemies agaynst them. If there be eny wicked persomes therfore fled from their countre mnto you, delyuer them vnto Symon the hye prest, $\hat{y}$ he maye punysh them acordinge to their owne lawe.

The same wordes wrote the Romaynes also vnto Demetrius the kynge, to Attalus, Araba, Arsaces and to all regions: as Samsanes, to them of Sparta, Delo, Mido, Sydon, Caria, Samos, Pamphilia, Lycia, Alicarnassum, and to $\dot{y}$ Rhooles: to Faselis, Coo, Sida, Arado, Gortyna, Gnydum, to Cypres and to Cyren. Aud of enery lettre they sent a copy to Symon the hye prest and to the people of the Jewes. So Antioclus the kynge brought his thest suto, Dora the seconde tyme, to take it: whore he made diuerse ordinañee of warre, and kepte Triphon in, $\dot{y}$ he shulde not come forth. Then Symon sent Antiochus two thousande chosen me to helpe him with golde, syluer and other plenteous geer: Neuerthelesse he wolde not receaue them, but brake all $\dot{y}$ couenaunt which he made with Symon afore, a withdrewe himself frō him.

He sent Athenobius also a frende of his snto Symon, for to reason with him, sayenge: Ye witholde fro me Iopya and Gaza (with the castell that is at Ierusalē) which are cities of my realme, whose borders ye haue destroyed, and done greate euell in the londe, hauynge the dominacio in many other places of iny kyngdome. Wherfore delyuer now $\dot{y}$ cities which ye haue takë, with $\dot{y}$ tributes of $\dot{y}$ places $\frac{\dot{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ ye haue rule rpon without the borders of Iewry: Or els geue me fyue hūdreth talentes of syluer, yee and for the harme that ye laue done in the cities and for the tributes of the same, other fyue hundreth talètes. Yf no, we shal come and fight agaynst you.

So Athenobius the kynges frende came to Ierusalē, and when he sawe fy greate worshipe and honoure of Symō in golde, syluer and so greate plenty of ornamentes: he marveled, and tolde Symon as the kynge commaunded him. Then answered Symon and saide mnto him: ${ }^{b} A s$ for vs , we laue nether taken other mēs londe, ner witholdē them, but only oure fathers heretage, which oure enemies had wrighteously in possession a certayne tyme. This heretage of oure fathers haue we chalenged in processe of tyme. And where as thon cöplaynest concernynge Ioppa and Gaza, they dyd greate harme to oure people and in onre londe, yet wyll we geue an C. talentes for them.

Nenertheles Athenobius answered him not one worde, but turned agayne wrothfully vito $\dot{y}$ kynge, and tolde him all these wordes, and the greate dignite of Symon with all that he had sene, and the kinge was very angrie. In the meane tyme fled Triphon by shippe unto Orthosaida. Then the kynge made Cendebeus captayne of the see coost, a gaue him an hoost of fote men and horsmen, cömaundinge him to remoue $y$ y host towarde Iewry, a to buylde tp the cite of Cedron, to make "p $\hat{y}$ portes, © to warre agaynst $\dot{y}$ people of the Iewes. As for the kynge him self, he folowed vpon Triphon. So Cendebeus came vnto Iamnia, © begame to vexe $\hat{y}$ people, to [^946]treade downe Iewry, to ${ }^{a}$ take the people presoners, to slaye the a to buylde vp Cedron: where he set horsmē © other men of warre, that they might come forth and go thorow the stretes of Iewry, like as the kynge had commaunded him.

©ye rai. Chapter.

A $T$HEN eame Ihon yp from Gaza, ${ }^{\text {b }}$ and tolde Symon his father, what Cendebeus had done amonge their people. Ipon this called Symon two of his eldest sonnes, Indas a Ihon, and sayde vnto them: I and my brethren a my fathers house, haue euer from oure youth up wito this daye, foughten agaynst the enemies of Israel, a God gave vs good fortune to delyuer Israel oft tymes. And now for so moch as I am olde, be ye in steade of me © my brother, to go forth ç fight for oure people, a the helpe of God be with you. So he chose xx. M. fightinge men of the countre, with horsmen also, which wente forth agaynst Cendebens and rested at Modin.

In the mornynge they arose, a wēte in to $\hat{y}$ playne felde : and beholde, a mightie greate hoost came agaynst the, both of fote men a horsmen. Now was there a water broke betwixte them, a Ihon remoued the hoost towarde them. And when he sawe that the people was afrayed to go oner $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ water broke, he wente ouer first him self: and the men seynge this, folowed him.
Then Ihon set his horsmen a fote men in ordre, the one by the other, for their enemies horsmen were very many. But when they blewe up the prestes trompettes, Cendebens fled with his hoost, wherof many were slayne, and the remnaunt gat them to their stronge holde. Iudas also Ihōs brother whas woūded at $\mathfrak{y}$ same tyme. And Ihon folowed still vpon y enemies, ${ }^{\text { }}$ till he came to Cedro which he buylded. The enemies fled also vnto the towres $\frac{t}{y}$ were in $\mathfrak{y}$ feldes of Azotus, a those dyd Ihon burne yp. Thus there were slayne ij. M. men of them, a Ihon turned agayne peaceably in to Iewry.

And in the felde of Iericho was Ptolomy the sonne of Abobus made eaptayne: which beeause he had abundaunce of syluer a golde. (for he had maried the donghter of Symon the hye prest) waxed proude in his mynde, đ thought to conquere the lode, jmageninge falsed agaynst Symō t his somnes, to destroye thē. Now as Symon was goynge aboute thorow the eities, $\dot{y}$ were in $\dot{y}$ coūtre of Iewry, and carynge for them: he came downe to Iericho, with Matathias a Iudas his sonnes, in the Clxxijy. yeare, in $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}} \mathrm{xj}$. moneth ealled Sabat. Then Ptolomy $\mathfrak{y}$ sonne of Abobus receaued them (but with disceate) in to a stronge house of his called Doch, which he had buylded, where he made them a bancket.

So when Symon a his sonnes were mery a had dronken well, Ptolomy stode vp with his men (who he had hyd there) a toke their weapens, entred in to the bancket house, a slewe Symon with his two sonnes, a certayne of his seruaūtes. Soch greate mfaithfulnesse dyd Ptolomy in Israel, and recōpensed enell for good. Then wrote this Ptolomy $\dot{y}$ same unto kynge Antiochus, requyringe him that he shulde sende him an hoost to helpe him: a so shulde he delyner him the londe, with the cities a tributes of the same. He sent other men also vnto Gaza, for to take Ihon: a wrote vito the captaynes to come to him, a he shulde geue them syluer, golde and rewardes. And to Ierusalem he sent other, to take it and the Sanctuary.

Thé ranne there one before, a tolde Ihon in Gaza, that his father his brethren were slayne, and how that Ptolomy had sent to slaie him also. Whè Ihon herde this, he was sore abaszshed, and layed hōdes of them that were come to destroye him, and slewe them: for he knewe, that they wente aboute to kyll him.

As for other thinges concernynge Ihon: of his warres, of his noble actes (wherin he behaued him self manfully) of the buyldinge of walles which he made, and other of his dedes: They are written in the eronicles of his presthode, from the tyme forth $\frac{t}{y}$ he was made hye prest after his father.

Che first Cfyapter.

TWE brethre of $\hat{y}$ Iewes which be at Ierusalem $\mathbb{\pi}$ in the londe of Iewry, wish vnto those brethree of y Iewes that are thorow out Egipte: good fortune, health and peace.

God the LORDE be gracious vnto you, at thynke pon his couenaunt $\frac{t}{y}$ he made with Abraham, Isaac © Iacob his faithfull seruauntes: and ${ }^{a}$ geue you all soch an herte, that ye maye loue and serue him, yee and perfourme his wyll with an whole herte and of a wyllinge mynde: He opē youre hertes in his lawe and in his commaundementes, sende you peace: heare youre prayers, be at one with you, and neuer forsake you in tyme of trouble. This is heare oure prayer for you.

What tyme as Demetrius raigned, in the Clxix. yeare, we Iewes wrote vnto you in $\mathfrak{y}$ trouble and violence that came vpon vs. In those yeares after that Iason departed out of the holy londe and kyngdome, they brent vp 33 the portes, and shed innocent bloude. Then made we oure prayer vnto y LORDE, and were herde: we offred, and lighted the candels, settinge forth cakes and bred. ${ }^{b}$ And now come ye vnto the feast of tabernacles in the moneth Casleu.

In the Clxxxviij. yeare $\dot{y}$ people $\frac{t}{y}$ was at Ierusalem and in Iewry, the councell and Iudas him self, sent this wholsome salutacio vnto Aristobolus kynge Ptolomys master, which came of the generacion of the anoynted prestes: and to the Iewes that were in Egipte: In so moch as God hath delyuered vs from greate parels, we thanke him hylie, In that we resisted so mightie a kynge. And why? he brought men out of Persis by heapes, to fight agaynst vs and the holy cite. For as he was in Persis (namely, ㅇ․ captayne with the greate hoost) he perished in the temple of Naneas, beynge disceaued thorow the deuyce of Naneas prestes. For as he was purposed to haue dwelt there, Antiochus tc his fredes came thither, to receaue moch moneye for a dowry. So whē Naneas prestes had layed forth $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ moneye, he entred with a small company in to the compasse of the temple, and so they shut the temple.
c
Now when Antiochus entred by openynge the preuy intraunce of the temple, $\dot{y}$ prestes stoned ${ }^{\frac{1}{2}}$ captayne to death, hewed the in peces that were with him, smote of their [^947]heades, and threwe them out. In all thinges God be praysed, which hath delyuered the wicked in to oure hondes.

Where as we now are purposed to kepe the purificacion of the temple vpon $\frac{8}{} \mathrm{xxr}$. daye of the moneth Casleu, we thought necessary to certifie you therof: that ye also might kepe the tabernacles feast daye, 5 the daye of the fyre, which was geuen vs when Nehemias offred, after that he had set vp y temple $\pi$ the aulter. For what tyme as oure fathers were led awaye vnto Persis, $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ prestes (which then sought the honoure of God) toke $\dot{y}$ fyre priuely from $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ aulter, of hyd it in a valley, where as was a depe drye pyt: © therin they kepte it, because the place was vnknowne to euery man. Now after many yeares when it pleased God, $\frac{t}{y}$ Nehemias shulde be sent from the kynge of Persia: he sent the childers children of those prestes (which had hyd the fyre) to seke it. And as they tolde vs, they founde no fyre, but thicke water.

The comaunded he them to drawe it vp, $\approx$ to brynge it him, a $\dot{y}$ offerynges withall. Now when y sacrifices were layed on a ordred, the prest Nehemias commaunded to sprenkle them at the wod with the water. Whe this was done, $t$ the tyme come $\dot{\mathrm{t}}^{\mathrm{y}}$ the Sonne shone, which afore was hyd in the cloude: there was a greate fyre kyndled, In so moch $\mathfrak{y}$ euery man marueled. Now all the prestes prayed, whyle the sacrifice was a makynge. Ionathas prayed first, and y other gaue answere.

And Nehemias prayer was after this maner: O LORDE God maker of all thinges, thou fearfull đ stronge, thou righteous § mercifull, thou $\frac{t}{y}$ art onely a gracious kynge, onely lyberall, onely iust, Allmightie and euerlastinge, thou $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ delyuerest Israel from all trouble, thou $y_{t}$ hast chosen the fathers a halowed them: receaue the offeringe for the whole people of Israel, preserue thine owne porcion, $\mathbb{C}$ halowe it. Gather those together, $\frac{t}{y}$ are scatred abrode from vs: delyuer them ${ }^{t}$ y are vader the Heithēs bondage, loke vpon them which are despysed $\mathbb{x}$ abhorred, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ the Heithen maie knowe a se, how $t$ thou art oure God: Punyshe them $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ oppresse, and proudly put vs to dishonoure. Set thy people agayne in thy holy place, ${ }^{d}$ like as Moses hath spokē.
c Leuit. 6. a. 10. a. 16. c. ${ }^{\triangleleft}$ Deu. 30. a.

玉' And the prestes songe P'salmes of thankesgeuynge, so loge as the sacrifice endured. Now when the saeritice was brent, Nehemias commanded the greate stones to be sprenkled with the ${ }^{\text {a }}$ resylue of the water. Which when it was done, there was kyndled a flamme of the also: but it was consumed thorow the light, $\stackrel{t}{\mathrm{y}}$ shyned from the aulter. So whe this matter was knowne, it was tolde the kynge of Persia, that in the place where the prestes (which were led awaye) had hyd fyre, there apeared water in steade of fyre, $x$ that Nehemias t his company had purified the sacrifices withall. 'Then the kynge considerynge a ponderynge $f$ matter diligently, made him a temple, to proue the thinge $\stackrel{t}{\mathrm{y}}$ was done. And whe he founde it so in dede, he gave the prestes many giftes $\frac{\pi}{\text { d dyucrse rewardes: yee }}$ he toke them with his owne hōde, r gaue thē. And Nochemias called the same place Nephthar, which is as moch to saye as a clensynge: but many men call it Nephi,

A $T^{T}$ is founde also in the writinges of Ieremy the prophet, $\dot{y}$ he commaunded them which were caried awaye, to take fyre, as it is sayde afore. ${ }^{b} \mathrm{He}$ comaunded them also, $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ they shulde not forget the 'lawe a comaundementes of the LORDE, $\frac{t}{y}$ they shulde not erre in their "myndes, whe they se ymages of syluer $\tau$ golde with their ornamentes. lt is wrytten also, how the prophet (at $\dot{\mathrm{g}}$ commaundement of God) charged them, to take the tabernacle a the arke with them: $\tau$ he wente forth vnto the mountaine, where Moses elymmed vp, "a sawe $\hat{y}$ heretage of God. And when leremy came there, he founde an open caue, wherin he layed the tabernacle, $\stackrel{y}{y}$ arke $\frac{\pi}{\text { t }}$ the aulter of incense, $\pi$ a) stopped the hole. There eame certayne men together also folowinge him, to marck
$i$ the place, but they coude not fynde it. Which when leremy pereeaued, he reproned thè, sayenge: $\Lambda \mathrm{s}$ for that place, it shalbe m knowne, motill y tyme that God gather his peophe together againe, a receaue the wnto mercy. Then shal God shewe them these [^948]thinges, the maiesty of the LORDE shall appeare, at the cloude also, like as it was shewed unto ${ }^{f}$ Moses: $\tau$ like as when Salomon desyred $\frac{t}{y}$ the place might be ${ }^{g}$ sanctified, $\mathbb{I}$ it was shewed him.

For he beynge a wyse man, handled honorably a wysely: offerynge vnto God in $\dot{y}$ halowinge of the temple, when it was fynished. ${ }^{4}$ And like as when Moses prayed snto the LORDE, the fyre came downe from heauen, a consumed the burntofferinge: Euen so prayed Salomon also, © the 'fyre came downe from heauen, a cösmed the burntofferinge. And Moses sayde: because the synofferynge was not eaten, therfore it is cōsumed. In like maner Salomon kepte the dedicacion (or halowynge) eight dayes.
ln $\underset{y}{\circ}$ Annotacions a wrytynges of * Ieremy, were these thinges put also: $\mathbb{t}$ how he made a lybrary, a how he gathered out of all countrees the bokes of the prophetes, of Dauid, the epistles of the kynges, and of the presentes. Euen so Iudas also, loke what he lerned by experiéce of warre, a soch thinges as hath happened wnto vs, he gathered thē all together, $\tau$ so we haue them by vs. If ye now desyre to haue the same, sende some body to fetch them unto you. Where as we the are aboute to celebrate the purificacion, we hane written vnto you. Therfore ye shall do well, yf ye kepe the same dayes. We hope also, that the God (which delyuered his people, tigaue them all $\dot{y}$ heretage, kyngdome, presthode a ${ }^{k}$ Sanctuary ${ }^{t}$ he promised them in the lawe) shal shortly haue mercy vpo vs, a gather vs together from vnder the heaue in to his holy place: for he hath saued vs frō greate parels, $x$ hath clensed the place.

As concernynge Iudas Machabeus a his brethren, the purificacion of the greate temple, the dedicacion of the aulter, yee a of the warres y coeerne noble Antiochus and 'Eupator his sonne, of the shyminges $\dot{y}$ came downe from heauen rpon those, which manfully defended the lewes. (For though they were but fewe, yet defended they the whole londe, droue awaye 8 y enemies hoost, recouered agayne the temple, $\frac{t}{y}$ was spoken of thorow out all the worlde, delyuered the eite, doynge their best $\dot{y}$ the lawe of the LORDE which was put downe, might with all tranquilite be [^949]restored agayne vnto the LORDE, $\dot{y}$ was so mercifull vnto the..) As touchinge lason also of Cyren, we haue vndertake cōpendiously to brynge in to one boke, the thinges ${ }^{t}$ were cöprehended of him in fyue. For we eōsideringe the multitude of the bokes, and how harde it shulde be for them $\frac{t}{y}$ wolde medle with stories and actes (and that beeause of so dyuerse matters) haue voder taken so to comprehende the stories: that soch as are disposed to reade, might haue pleasure and pastyme therin : and that they which are diligent in soch thinges, might the better thinke vpon them: yee and that who so euer red them, might haue profit therby.

玉 Neuerthelesse we oure selues that have medled with this matter for the shortenynge of it, haue taken no small laboure, but greate diligence, watchynges and trauayle. Like as they that make a feast, wolde fayne do other men pleasure: Euen so we also (for many mens sakes) are very wel content to take the laboure, where as we maye shortly comprehede, the thynges that other men haue truly wrytten.

For he $\mathrm{y}^{\mathrm{y}}$ buyldeth an house a new, must prouyde for many thynges to $\mathfrak{y}$ whole buyldinge: but he that paynteth it afterwarde, 'seketh but only what is comly, mete and conuenient to garnysh it withall. Euen so do we also in like maner. And why? He that begyuneth to wryte a story for the first, must with his moderstondinge gather the matter together, set his wordes in ordre, and diligently seke out euery parte: But he that afterwarde wyll shorten it, vseth few wordes, and toucheth not the matter at the largiest. Let this be sufficient for a prologe, now wyll we begynne to shewe the matter: for it is but a foolish thinge to make a longe prologe, and to be shorte in the story it self.

WHAT tyme as the holy cite was inhabited in all peace and wealth, $\pi$ when the lawes were yet very well kepte. (For so was it ordened by Onias the hye prest and other godly men, that were enemies to wickednesse:) It came therto, that euen the kynges and ${ }^{a}$ prynces the selues dyd the place greate worshipe, and garnyshed ${ }^{\dot{8}}$ temple with greate giftes: In so moch that Seleucus kynge of Asia of his owne rentes bare all the costes ${ }^{b}$ belonginge to the seruyce of the offerynges. Then Symon of the trybe of Ben Iamin, a ruler of the temple, laboured to worke some myschefe in the cite: but the hye prest resisted him.

Neuerthelesse when he might not ouereome Onias, he gat him to ${ }^{\text {c }}$ Appolonius the sonne of Thersa (which the was chefe lorde in Celosyria and Phenices) and tolde him, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ the treasury in lerusalem was full of innumerable mones, and how that the comons goodes (which belonged not vnto the offeringes) were exceadinge greate also: yee and how it were possible, that all these might come vnder the kynges power.

Now when Appollonius had shewed the kynge of the moneye, as it was tolde him: $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ kinge called for Heliodorus his stewarde, and sent him with a commaundement, to brynge him the sayde money. Immediatly Heliodorus toke his iourney, but vnder a coloure, as though he wolde go thorow Celosyria and Phenices to ryset the cities, but his purpose was to fulfill the kynges pleasure. So when he came to Ierusalem, and was louyngly receaued of the hye prest in to the cite : he tolde what was determed eoncernynge the moneye, and shewed the cause of his commynge: he axed also, if it were so in dede. Then the hye prest tolde him, that there was soch money layed vp for the rpholdinge of weddowes and fatherlesie childre, and how that a certayne of it belonged into Hyrcanus Tobias a noble man: and that of all the moneye (which that wieked Symon had bewrayed) there were $\mathrm{i} i \mathrm{ij}$. hundreth talentes of syluer, and ij . hundreth of golde: yee $\uparrow$ that it were snpossible for those mens meaninge to be disceaued, that had layed yp their moneye in the place and temple (which is had in worshipe thorow the whole worlde) for the mayntenaunce and honoure of $\mathfrak{y}$ same. Whervnto Heliodorus answered, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ the kynge had commaunded him in eny wyse, to brynge him the moneye.

So at the daye appoynted, Heliodorus at entred in to the temple to ordre this matter. But there was no small feare thorow out the whole cite. The prestes fell downe before the aulter in their vestimentes, and called vnto heauen vpon him, whieh had made a lawe concernynge stuffe geuen to kepe, ${ }^{a}$ that they shulde be saffly preserued. for soch as comitte them noto kepynge. Then who so had loked the hye prest in the face, it wolde hame greued his herte: For his comatename and the chaunginge of his coloure, declared the inwarde sorowe of his mynde. The má was all in henynesse, and his body in feare: wherby they that loked pon hins, might percealle the grefe of his herte. The other prople also came ont of their houses by heapes vato the comon prayer, becanse the place was like to come in to confucion. The women came together thorow the stretes, with havrie clothes aboute their brestes.

'The virgins also that were kepte in, ranne to Onias, some to the walles, other some loked out at the wyndowes: yee they all helde "p their hondes towarde heaue, a prayed. A miserable thinge was it, to loke ypon the comon people, a the hye prest beynge in soch trouble. But they besought Ahmightic Gol, that the goodes which were committed wnto the, might be kepte whole, for those that had deliuered them vnto their kepynge. Neuertheles the thinge that Heliodorus was determed to do, that perfourmed he in the same place, he him self personally beynge aboute the treasury with his men of warre. But the sprete of Alhmightie God shewed him self openly, so that all they which presumed to obeye Heliodorus, fell thorow $\dot{y}$ power of God in to a greate fearfulnesse a drede. For there apeared vnto them an horse, ${ }^{b}$ with a terrible man syttinge vpon him, deckte in goodly araye, and the horse smote at Heliodorus with his fore fete. Now he that sat vpon $\hat{y}$ horse, had harnesse of golde spon him.

Morouer there apeared ij. fayre and beutifull yonge men in goodly araye, which stode by him, scourged him of both the sydes, a gatue him many stripes without ceassinge. With that, fell Heliodorus sodenly vnto the grounde. 'So they toke him vp (beynge compased aboute with greate darcknesse) and 玉 bare him out voo a beare. Thus he that came with so many rumners and men of warre in to $\ddot{y}$ sayde treasury, was borne out, where as no man might helpe him: and so the power of Gorl was manifest and knowne. He laye still domme also by the power of God, [^950]destitute of all hope and life. And they praysed the LORDE, that he had shewed his power vpon his place and temple, which a litle afore was full of feare a trouble: and that thorow the renelacion of the Almightie LORDE it was fylled with ioye and gladnesse.

Thè certaine of Heliodorus frēdes praied Onias, that in all haist he wolde call vpon God, to gramnte him his life, which was geuynge vp the goost. So the hye prest considered the matter, and lest the kynge shulde suspecte that the Iewes had done Heliodorus some enell: he offred an healthofferynge for him. Now whe $\begin{gathered}\text { y } \\ \text { hye prest had opteyned his }\end{gathered}$ peticion, the same yonge me in the same clothinge apeared, $\tau$ stode besyde Heliodorus, sayenge: Thanke Onias f hye prest, for for his sake hath $\hat{y}$ LORDE graunted the thy life: ${ }^{d}$ therfore seynge $\dot{t}_{\mathrm{y}}^{\mathrm{t}}$ God hath scourged $\dot{\dot{y}}$, geue him prayse a thankes, and shewe enery man his might a power. And whe they had spoken these wordes, they apeared nomore.
so Heliodorus offred vnto God, made greate vowes snto him which had graūted him his life, thāked Onias, toke his hoost, a wēte againe to y kinge. The testified he vnto euery mā, of $\dot{y}$ greate workes of God, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ he had sene with his eyes. And whe the kynge axed Heliodorus who were mete to be sent yet once agayue to Ierusalem, he sayde: If thou hast eny enemy or aduersary vnto thy realme, sende him thither, © thou shalt haue him punished, yf he eseape with his life : for in ${ }^{ \pm}$place (no doute) there is a speciall power a workinge of God. For he $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ dwelleth in heaue, vysiteth defendeth $\dot{y}$ place: $\pi$ all $\dot{y}$ come to do it harme, he punysheth a plageth the. 'This is now y matter cocerninge Heliodorus, a $y$ kepinge of $\frac{f}{y}$ treasury at Ierusalē.

Che iiij. Cbapter.

THIS symon now (of whom we spake afore) 'heynge a bewrayer of the money and of his owne naturall countre, reported the worst of Onias: as though he had moued Heliodorus vnto this, and as though he had bene a brynger up of euell. Thus was he not ashamed to call him an enemie of $y$ realme, that was so faithfull an ouerseer $\mathbb{I}$ defender of the cite a of his people: yee a so feruent in the lawe of God. But when the malice of Symon increased so farre, $\dot{y}$ thorow his frendes there were certayne manslaughters conitted: Onias considered the parell $\frac{t}{y}$ might come thorow this strife, and how that $\lambda_{p p o l l o n i u s}$ (namely the chefe lorde in Celosyria and Phenices) was all set vpon tyranmy, and Symons malice increased the same: He gat him to the kynge, not as an accuser of the citesyns, but as one that by him self intended the comon wealth of the whole multitude. For he sawe it was not possible to lyue in peace, nether Symon to leane of from his foolishnesse, excepte the kynge dyd loke therto.

But after the death of Seleucus, when Antiochus (which is called the noble) toke $\dot{y}$ kyngdome: Iason the brother of Onias laboured to be hye prest: For he came vito the kynge, and promised him thre hundreth $t \mathrm{~lx}$. talentes of syluer, $\pi$ of the other rētes lixx. talentes. Besydes this he promised him yet an C. r L, yf he might haue $\hat{y}$ scole of $\hat{y}$ children, and that he might call them of Ierusalem Antiochians. Which when the kynge had graunted, © he had gotten the superiorite: he begane immediatly to drawe his kinsmen to the custome of the Heithen, put downe the thinges, that the Icwes had set yp of loue, by thon the father of Eupolemius (which was sent embassitoure vnto Rome, for to make the bonde of frendshipe and loue.) He put downe all the Lawes $\pi$ Lyberties of the Tewes, and set vp wicked statutes. He durst make a fightinge scole vnder y castell, and set fayre yonge men to lerne the maners of whores and brodels.

This was now the begynnynge of the Heithenish a straunge couersacion, brought in thorow the ungracious and vnherde wickednesse of Iason (which shulde not be called a prest, but an ungodly personne.) In so moeh, that the prestes were now nomore occupide aboute the seruyce of the aulter, but despysed the temple, regarded not the offrynges: yee gaue their diligèce to lerne to fight, to wristle, to leape, to daunce, $\mathbb{a}$ to put at $\dot{y}$ stone: not settynge by $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ honoure of $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ fathers, but liked $\hat{y}$ glory of the Grekes best of all: for the which they strone perlously, and were gredy to folowe their statutes, yee their lust was in all thinges to be like the , which afore were their enemies © destroyers. Howbeit to do wickedly agaynst y lawe of God, shal not escape vnpunyshed: but of this we shal speake here after.

What tyme as the *Olympiades sportes were played at Tyrus (the kynge him selfe beinge presente) this vngracious Iason sent wicked men, hearinge from them of Ierusalem (which now were ealled Antiochians) iij. C. drachnas of syluer for an offerynge to Hercules. These had they that caried them, desyred vnder soch a fashiō, as though they shulde not haue bene offred, but bestowed to other vses. Neuertheles he that sent them, sent them to the intent that they shulde be offred vinto Hercules. But because of those that were present, they were genen as to the makynge of shippes. And Appollonius the sonne of Nesteus was sent in to Egipte, because of the noble men of kynge Ptolomy Philometor. Now when Antiochus perceaned ${ }^{\mathrm{y}}$ he was put out from medlinge in the realme, he sought his owne profit, departed from thence, eame to Loppa, đ then to Ierusalem: where he was honorably receaned of Iason $\pi$ the eite, a was brought in with torche light and with greate prayse: and so he turned his hoost vato Phenices.

After iij. yeare Iason sent Menelaus (the fore sayde Symons brother) ${ }^{b}$ to beare the money vato ${ }^{\circ}$ kynge, $\pi$ to bringe him answere of other necessary matters. But he (when he was praysed of $y$ kynge for magnifienge of his power) turned $\hat{y}$ hye presthode vato him self, layenge vp iij. C. taletes of syluer for Iason. So whề he had gotten cōmaundemētes from $\dot{y}$ kynge, he eame, hauinge nothinge $\underset{y}{t}$ becometh a prest, but bearinge $\dot{y}$ stomack of a cruell tyraunte, $\pi$ the wrath of a wylde brute beest. "Then Iason (which had disceaued his owne brother) seynge y he him self was begyled also, was fayne to fle in to y lode of $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ Ámmonites, a Menelaus gat $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ dominiō. But as for ${ }^{\circ}$ moneye ${ }^{t}$ he had promised vito the kynge, he dyd nothinge therin, when Sostratus the ruler of $\stackrel{8}{y}$ castell requyred it of him. (For Sostratus was the man, $y^{\frac{y}{y}}$ gathered y customes) wherfore they were both called before the kynge. Thus was Menelaus put out of $\dot{y}$ presthode, a Lysimachus his brother came in his steade. Sostratus also was made lorde of the Cyprians.

It happened in ẙ meane season, $\mathrm{y}_{\mathrm{y}}^{\mathrm{y}}$ y Tharsians a Mallocians made insurreciô, because [^951][^952]'they were genen for a present suto kynge Dutiochus concubye. Then cane of kinge in all $y$ haist. to still them agayne and to pacitie the matter, lemynge Antrinicns there to be his deloyte, ats mie mete therfore. Now Ienelans supposinge that he had gotten a right convenient tyme, stole certayne vessels of solde out of the temple, and gane the to Audromiens fir a prement: and some he solde at Tyrus and in the cities therby.

Which when Onias kuewe of a suertye, he repronet him: but he kepte him in a santuary hesyde Diphluis, that lyeth by Antioche. Wherfore Menelans gat him to Andronicus, and prayed him that he wolde slaye Onias. So when he came to Onias, he counceled him (rattely to come out of the santuary, genynge hium his houde with an ooth (how be it he suppecte him) and the he slewe Onias, without cny regarde of rightuousnesse. For the which canse not only the Jewes, but other narions also toke indignacion, aud were displeased for the mrightuous death of so godly a man. from Cilicia, the Jewes and certaine of the Grekes weute vnto him, complayninge for the vmrightuous death of Onias. Yee Antiochus himself also was sory in his mynde for Onias, so $\dot{y}$ it pitied him, and he wepte, remembringe his sobernesse and manerly behauoure. Wherfore he was so kyudled in his mynde. $\frac{y}{}$ he cōmaunded Audronicus to be striped out of his purple clothinge. a so to be led thorow out all the cite, yee and $\dot{y}$ vngracious uan to be slayne in y same place, where he committed his wickednes rpon Onias. Thus $\hat{y}$ LORDE rewarded him his punyshment, as he had deserued. Now when Lysimachus had done many wyeked dedes in $\dot{y}$ temple thorow the councell of Menelans, and the voyee came abrode: the multitude gathered the together agaynst Lisimachus, for he had caried out now noch golde.
so when the people arose and were full of displeasure, Lismachus armed iij. M. vnthriftes to defende him: a certayne tyraunte beynge their captayne, which was growen both in age a woodnesse. But when the people viderstode the purpose of Lysimachus, some gat stones, some good stronge" clubbes, t some caist aszshes vpon Lisimachus. Thus there were many of the wommeded, sone beynge slayne, © all the other chaced awaye. But as for ' ${ }^{\prime}$ ' wicked churchrobber himself, they kylled him besyde the treasury. Of these matters therfore there was kepte a courte agaynst Menelaus.
Now when $\hat{y}$ kinge came to Tyrus, they made a cōplaynte vinto him of Menelaus, concerninge this busynesse, © $\mathfrak{y}$ embassitours were thre. But Menclaus wente a promised Ptolomy to gene him moch money, yf he wolde persuade the kynge. So Ptolomy wēte to the kinge in to a courte (where as he was set to coole him) $x$ brughte him out of $\dot{y}$ mynde. In so moch $\hat{y}$ he discharged Menelaus frō $\dot{y}$ accusacions, $\dot{y}$ not withstondinge was cause of all myschefe: and those poore men (which yf they had tolde their cause, yee before the scythians, they shulde haue ben iudged imnocēt) the he cōdèned to death. 'Yhus were they soone punsshed, which folowed holy vessell. Wherfore they of Tyrus toke indignacion, $\tau$ buried thē honorably. And so thorow $\dot{y}$ covetousnesse of them that were in power, Menelaus remayned still in authorite, inereasinge in malyce, to the hurte of the citesyns.

© 1 ) $\mathfrak{e}$. $\mathfrak{C l y a p t e r}$.

AT $\dot{y}$ same tyme Antiochus made him ready to go againe in to Egipte. Thē were there sene at lerusalem (xl. dayes loge) horsmè runninge to and fro in the ayre, which had rayment of golde, $x$ speares. There were sene also whole hoostes of mé weapened. a horses runuynge in an ordre, how they came together, how they helde forth their shildes, how $\dot{y}$ harnessed men drew out their sweardes, $r$ shot their dartes. The shyne of $\hat{y}$ goldê weapés was sene, a of all maner of armure. Wherfore eury ma ${ }^{1}$ prayed, $\frac{\dot{y}}{\hat{y}}$ those tokens might turne to good. Now whe there was gone forth a false rumoure, as though Antiochus had bene deed: Iason toke a M. mē, đ came sodeldy rpō ẙ cite. The citesyns rāne vnto $\dot{y}$ walles, at $\hat{y}$ last was $\hat{y}$ cite taken, and Menelaus fled in to the castell.

As for lason, he spared not his owne citesyns in the slaughter, nether considered he what greate eudll it were, to destroye $\mathfrak{y}$ prosperite of his owne kynsmen: but dyd as one that had gotten the victory of his enemies, and not of his frendes. For all this gatt he not the superiorite, but at the last receaued confucion for his malice, and ${ }^{\circ}$ fled agayne like a vagabunde in to the londe of the Ammonites. Fynally (for a rewarde of his wickednesse) he was accused before Aretha the kynge of the Arabians: In so moch that he was fayne to fle from cite to cite, beynge despysed of enery man as a forsaker of the lawes, and an abhominable personne. And at y last (as an open enemy of his owne naturall countre and of the citcsyns, ) he was dryuen in to Egipte.

Thus he $\stackrel{t}{y}$ afore put many out of their owne natyue londe, peryshed from home him self. He wente to Lacedemon, thinkinge there to haue gotten sucoure by reason of kyurede. And he that afore had casten many one out vnburied, was throwen out himself, no man mournynge for him, ner puttinge him in his grane: so that he nether enioyed $\dot{y}$ buriall of a straunger, nether was he partaker of his fathers sepulere.

Now when this was done the kinge suspecte, ${ }_{y}^{t}$ the Iewes wolde haue fallen from him: wherfore he came in a greate displeasure out of Egipte, $\tau$ toke the cite by violence. ${ }^{18}$ He comaunded his men of warre also, that they shulde kyll $\pi$ not spare, but slaye downe soch as with stode them, or clymmed vp ypo $y$ houses. Thus was there a greate slaughter of yonge men, olde men, women, children and virgins. In iij. dayes were there slayne laxx. M. fourty thousande put in preson, a no lesse solde. Yet was he not cōtent with this, but durst go in to the most holy temple (Menelaus that traytoure to $\frac{8}{\mathrm{y}}$ lawes to his owne naturall countre, beynge his gyde) a with his wicked hondes toke $f$ holy vessell, which other kynges $\pi$ cities had geuen thither for $\dot{y}$ garnishinge a honoure of $\dot{y}$ place: the toke he in his hodes mworthely, a defyled them.

So madd was Antiochus, that he considered not, how that God was a litle wroth for the synnes of them that dwelt in the cite, for the which soch confucion came vpon that place. And why? 'yf it had not happened them to hauc bene lapped in many synnes, this Autiochus (as soone as he had come) had sodenly bene punished, and shot out for his presmmpciõ: "like as Heliodorus was, whom Seleucus the kynge sente to robbe $\bar{y}$ treasury. Neuertheles God hath not chosen the people for the places sake, but the place for the peoples sake: and therfore is the place become partaker of the peoples trouble, but afterwarde shall it enioye the wealth of them. And like as it is now forsaken in the wrath of atlmighty God, so when the greate Gor is reconcyled, it shal be set p in hye worshipe agayne.
so when Antiochus had taken a M. and viij. C. talentes out of the temple, he gat him to Antioche in all the haist, thinkinge in his pryde, that be might make me sale vpon the drye londe, and to go vpon $\dot{y}$ see, soch an hye mynde had he. He lefte debites there to vexe the people: At Ierusalem left he Philippe a Phrigian, in maners more cruell the himself $\dot{y}$ set him there: $\Lambda$ t Garisim he left Audronicus r Menelaus, which were more greuous to the citisyns then other. Now as he was thus set in malyce against $\stackrel{y}{9}$ Iewes, he sent Appollonius an hated prynce, ${ }^{e}$ with xxij. M. comaundinge him to slaye all those $\frac{t}{y}$ were of perfecte age, and to sell the wome maydes t children. When he came now to Ierusalem, he fained peace, a kepte him still vntill $\hat{y}$ Sabbath daye. And then he cōmaunded his men to take them to their weapens (for $\hat{y}$ Iewes kepte holy daye) and so he slewe all them $\frac{t}{y}$ were gone forth to the open playe, runninge here and there thorow the cite with his men wapened, and murthured a greate nombre. ${ }^{f}$ But Iudas Machabeus which was the tenth, fled in to the wyldernesse. led his life there with his company amonge the wylde beestes and rpon the mountaynes: dwellinge there and eatinge grasse, lest they shulde be partakers of the fylthynesse.

Uhe bi. Chapter.

NOT longe after this. sent the kynge a messaunger of Antioche, ${ }^{5}$ for to compell $y$ Iewes to altre $f$ ordinaunces of $f$ fathers a the lawe of God, to defyle the temple $\dot{y}$ was at Ierusalem, $\pi$ to call it the tēple of Iupiter Olimpius: © ${ }^{\text {y }}$ they shulde be in Gazarim, as those which dwell at ${ }_{y}$ place of Iupiter the harberous. This wicked sediciō of $\dot{y}$ vngodly was heuy vpon all $\dot{y}$ people: For $\dot{y}$ temple was full of voluptuousnes bebbinge a bollinge of $y$ Heithe, of ribandes a harlottes together. The wome wente in to $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ holy place, a bare lin that was not lanfull. The aulter also was finll of rulamfull thinges, which 8 lawe forbyduleth to laye vpeit. The sabbathes were not kepte, the other solempne feastes of $\mathfrak{y}$ londe were not regarded. To be plaine, there durst no ma be a knowne that he was a Iewe.

In the dage of the kynges byrth they were compelled perforce to offre: $\tau$ when $\dot{y}$ feast of Bachus was kepte, they were constrayned to weere garlaules of yven, and so to go aboute for the honoure of Bachus.

Moroner thorow the councell of Ptolomy, there wente out a commaundement in $\underset{y}{b}$ nexte cities of the Heithen, $\dot{y}$ they shulde intreate the lewes in like maner : namely, to copell the for to do sacrifice after $y$ lawes of $\mathfrak{y}$ (ientiles: and who so wolde not, to put them to death. "A piteous thinge was it to se. There were i!. women aceused to haue eircumcided their sonnes, whom when they had led rounde aboute the cite (the babes hanginge at their brestes) they cast them downe headlinges ouer the walles. Some $\frac{t}{y}$ were crepte in to dennes and had kepte the Sabbath, were accused vnto Philippe, and brent in the fyre : because that for the feare of God they kepte the commaüdement so stiffly, and wolde not defende them selues.

Now I beseke all those which reade this boke, that they refuse it not for these falles of aduersite: a iudge the thinges ( $y$ are happened) for no destruccion, but for a chastenynge of oure people. And why? Whē God suffreth not synners longe to folowe their owne mynde, ${ }^{6}$ but shortly punysheth them, it is a toke of his greate louynge kyndnes. For this grace haue we of God more then other people, $\frac{t}{y}$ he suffreth not vs longe to symue mpunyshed like other nacions, that when the daye of iudgment commeth, he maye punysh the in the fulnes of their synnes. If we synne, he correcketh vs, but he neuer withdraweth his merey frō vs: a though he puysh with aduersite, yeth doth he neuer forsake his people. But let this that we haue spoke now with few wordes, be for a warninge t exortacio of $\grave{8}$ Heithē. Now wil we come to the declaringe of the matter. Eleazar one of $\hat{y}$ principall scribes, an aged mā $\mathfrak{c}$ of a welfanored countenañce, was cosstrained to gape with opei mouth $x$ to eate swynes flesh. ${ }^{\text {e }}$ But [^953]he desyringe rather to dye gloriously the to liue with shame, offred himself willigly to $\dot{y}$ martirdome. Now whe he sawe $\dot{t}_{\mathrm{t}}^{\mathrm{t}}$ he must nedes go to it, he toke it paciétly: for he was at a poynte with himself, $\frac{t}{y}$ he wolde consente to no vnlaufull thynge for eny pleasure of life. They $\frac{t}{}$ stode by beynge moued with pyte (but not a right) for $\mathfrak{y}$ olde frendshipe of the man, toke him asyde priuely, and prayed him $\dot{y}$ he wolde let soch flesh be brought him as were laufull to eate, a the to make a coūtenañee as though he had eaten of $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ flesh of $\hat{y}$ sacrifice like as the kynge commaunded, for so he might be delyuered from death: a so for the olde frendshipe of $\mathfrak{y}$ man, they shewed him this kindnes. But he beganne to considre his discrete and honorable age, his noble and worshipfull stocke, and how $\frac{\dot{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ fro his youth vp he had bene of an honest and good conuersacion, yee $x$ how constantly he had kepte $\dot{f}$ ordinaunces and lawes commaūded by God, wherfore he gaue them this answere, and sayde:

Yet had I rather first be layed in my graue. ${ }^{d}$ For it becommeth not myne age (sayde he) in eny wyse to dyssemble, wherby many yonge personnes might thinke, that Eleazar beinge lxxx. yeare olde and ten, were now gone to a straunge life: and so thorow myne ypocrisy (for a litle tyme of a transitory life) they might be disceaued: by this meanes also shulde I defyle myne age, a make it abhominable. For though I were now delyuered from the tormentes of men, yet shulde I not escape the ${ }^{e}$ honde of allmightie God, nether alyue ner deed. Wherfore I will dye manfully, a do as it becommeth myne age: Wherby I maie peraduenture leaue an exaple of stedfastnesse for soch as be yonge, yf I with a ready mynde a manfully dye an honest death, for the most worthy and holy lawes.

When he had sayde these wordes, immediatly he was drawen to the tormēte. Now they that led him and were mylde a litle afore, beganne to take displeasure, because of the wordes $\dot{\mathrm{t}}$ he sayde: for they thought he had spoke them of an hye mynde. But whe he was in his martirdome, he mourned and sayde: Thou (O LORDE) which hast the holy knowlege, knowest openly : that where as I might be delyuered frō death, I suffre these sore paynes of my body: but in my mynde I lam wel contente to suffre them, because I feare the. Thus this man dyed, leauynge $\dot{y}$ memoriall of his death for an example, not only vinto yonge men, but vnto all $\stackrel{y}{y}$ people, to be stedfast and manly.
${ }^{4} 1$ Tess. 5. c. CAmos 1.a.

Clye bíj. Cbapter.

I' T happened also that there were vij . ${ }^{a}$ brethren (with their mother) taken, a compelled by the kynge agaynst the lawe, to eate swynes flesh: namely with scourges and lethren whippes. And one of them which was y chefe, sayde: What sekest thou, and what requyrest thou of vs? As for vs, we are ready rather to suffie death, then to offende the lawes of God and the fathers. Then was the kynge angrie, and bad heate cauldrons and brasen pottes. Which when they were made hote, immediatly he commaunded $\hat{y}$ tonge of him that spake first, to be cut out, to pull the skynne ouer his heade, to payre of the edges of his handes and fete: yee and that in the sight of his mother and the other of his brethren. Now when he was cleane marred, he commaunded a fyre to be made, a so (whyle there was eny breath in him) to be fryed in the caudron. In the which when he had bene longe payned, the other brethren with their mother exorted him to dye manfully, sayege: The LORDE God shal regarde the treuth, and comforte vs, like as Moses testifieth and declareth in his ${ }^{\text {b }}$ songe, sayenge : and he wyl haue compassion on his seruauntes.

So whe the first was deed after this maner, they brought the seconde to haue him in derision, pulled the skynne with the hayre ouer his heade, and axed him, yf he wolde eate swynes flesh, or he were payned in $\dot{y}$ other membres also thorow out his body. But he answered boldly, and sayde: I will not do it. And so was he tormented like as $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ first. And whè he was euē at $\dot{y}$ geuinge vp of $\dot{y}$ goost, he sayde: 'Thou most vngracious personne puttest vs now to death, but the kynge of $\stackrel{\stackrel{\circ}{y} \text { worlde shall rayse vs vp (which }}{ }$ dye for his lawes) in $\dot{y}$ resurreccion of enerlastinge life.

After him, was the thirde had in derision : and when he was requyred, he putt out his tonge, and that right soone, holdinge forth his hondes manfully, and spake with a stedfast faith: 'These haue 1 of heaué. but now for the lawe of God I despyse them: for my trust is, that I shall receaue them of him agayne. In so moch that the kynge and they which were with him, marueled at the yonge mans boldnesse, that he nothinge regarded the paynes.

Now when he was deed also, they rexed the $\mathbb{C}$ fourth with tormentes in like maner. so when he was now at his death, he sayde: It is better that we beynge put to death of nehaue oure hope and trust in God, for he shal rayse vs up agayne. ${ }^{\text {c }}$ As for the, thou shalt hane no resurreccion to life.

And when they had spoken to the fifth, they tormeted him. Then loked he vnto $\dot{\underset{y}{y}}$ kinge, © sayde: 'Thou hast power amōge mé (for thou art a mortall man also thy self) to do what thou wilt, but thinke not, ${ }^{t}$ God hath forsaken oure generacion. Abyde the, tary styll a whyle, a thou shalt se the greate power of God, how he wil punysh the a thy sede.

After him they brought the sixte, which beynge at the poynte of death, sayde: Be not disceaued (o kynge) for this we suffre for oure owne sakes, because we haue offended oure God, $\pi$ therfore marvelous thinges are shewed rpon rs. But thinke not thou (which takest in honde to stryue agaynst God) that thou shalt escape mppunyshed.

This excellent mother (worthy to be well E reported of, and had in remembraunce) sawe hir seuen sonnes dye in one daye, and suffred it pacietly, because of the hope that she had in God: Yee she exorted euery one of them in especiall, and that boldly and stedfastly, with parfite wyszdome, wakynge vp hir wyuysh thought with a manly stomacke, and sayde vnto them: I can not tell how ye came in my wombe, for I nether gane you breth ner soule, no ner life. It is not $I \frac{t}{y}$ iogned $\frac{f}{y}$ mebres of youre bodies together, but $\dot{y}$ maker of $\dot{y}$ worlde, which fashioned $\dot{y}$ byrth of mā, a begane all thinges. Euen he also of his owne mercy shall geue you breath and life agajne, like as ye now regarde not youre owne selues for his lawes sake.

Now thought Antiochus that she had despysed him, therfore he let her go with hir reproues, and beganne to exorte the yongest sonne (which yet was left) not only with wordes

[^954]but suore vato him with an ooth, $\dot{y}$ he shulde make him a rich a welthy man (yf he wolde forsake $\dot{y}$ lawes of his fathers) yee and $\frac{8}{y}$ he sholde gene him, what so euer were necessary
玉for him. But whe the yonge man wolde not he moued, for all these thinges, he called his mother, a counceled hir to saue hir sonnes life. And when he had exorted her with many wordes, she promised him, that she shulde speake vato hir some. So she turned her vnto him (langhinge y eruell tyraunte to scorne) a spake with a botde voyce: O my somme, haue pite yon me, $\stackrel{t}{\mathrm{y}}$ bare $\underset{\mathrm{y}}{\mathrm{f}} \mathrm{ix}$. monethers in my wombe, that gaue the sucke, norished the and brought the vp vato this age. I beseke the (my sonne) loke von heanen and earth and all that is therin, and considre, that God made them and mans generacion of naught: so shalt thou not feare this hangman, but suffre death stedfastly, like as thy brethren have done: that I maye receauc the agayne in the same mercy with thy brethren.

Whyle she was yet speakynge these wordes, the yonge man sayde: Whom loke ye for? Wherfore do ye tary? I wil not oheye the kynges commaundement, but the lawe that God gaue vs by ${ }^{a}$ Moses. As for the that ymaginest all myschefe agaynst the Iewes, thon shalt not escape the honde of God: for we suffre these thinges, because of oure symues. whyle (for oure chasteninge a reformacion, yet shal he be at one agayne with his seruauntes. But thou. (O shame full $\pi$ most abhominable personne.) Pryde not thy self thorow vayne hope, in beynge so malicious ypon ${ }^{\prime \prime}$ seruauntes of God: for thou hast not yet escaped the indgmet of the God, which is all mighty, a seyth all thinges. My brethren ${ }^{\frac{t}{y}}$ liaue suffied a litle payne, are now voder the conenaunt of euerlastinge life: but thorow the iudgment of God, thou shalt be punyshed righteously for thy pryde.

As for me (like as my brethre have done) I offre my soule a my body for $\mathfrak{y}$ lawes of oure fathers, callinge vpon God, $\frac{t}{y}$ he will soone be mereifull vato oure people: yee a with payne ${ }^{\tau}$ punyshment to make the graunte, ${ }^{b}{ }^{t}$ he only is Griod. In me now T in my brethrē ỳ wrath of allmighty Gool is at an ende, which [^955]righteously is falle vpon all oure people. Then $\hat{y}$ kynge beynge kyndled in anger, was more cruell vpon him then wpon all $\frac{8}{y}$ other, a toke indignació, $\mathfrak{y}^{\mathfrak{y}}$ he was so lightly regarded. So this yonge mā dyed modefiled, a put his trust stil in $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE. Last of all after y sonnes, was $\dot{y}$ mother put to death also. Let this now be ynough spoken, concernynge $\mathfrak{y}$ offringes, © extreme cruelnesse.

The biii. Clyapter.

THEN ludas Machabeus and they $\frac{\mathfrak{z}}{y}$ were with him, wēte pryuely in to $\dot{y}$ townes, called their kinsfolkes at frendes together, toke vnto them all soch as contynued yet in the faith and lawe of $\mathfrak{y}$ Iewes, and brought forth vj. M. men. So they called vpon the LORDE, ${ }^{t}$ he wolde have an eye unto his people, which was troddē downe of euery mā: to be gracious vato $\dot{y}$ téple, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ was defyled of the vagodly: to haue copassion tpon $y$ destruccion of the cite, (which was shortly like to be laied waist) to heare ${ }^{\circ}$ voyce of $\dot{y}$ bloude $y^{t}$ cried vnto him: to remëbre $\dot{y}$ most vnrighteous deathes of yonge innocent children, the blasphemies also done vuto his name, $\frac{\pi}{\text { to punysh the. Now }}$ whe ${ }^{\text {c }}$ Machabeus had gathered this multitude together, he was to mightie for the Heithen (for $\mathfrak{y}$ wrath of $\hat{y}$ LORDE was turned in to mercy) he fell ypon the townes and cities vnawarres, brent them, toke the most comodious places, $t$ slewe many of the enemies. But specially he made soch chases by night, in so moch that his manlynesse was spoken of eucry were.
so when Philippe sawe that the man increased by litle and litle, and that the matter prospered with him for the most parte: he wrote vnto Ptolomy (which was a captayne in Celosiria a Phenices) to helpe him in y kinges busynes. The sent he Nicanor Patroeli (a speciall frende of his) in all $\hat{y}$ haist, ${ }^{d}$ 匹 gaue him of y comon sorte of the Heithen no lesse than xx . MI. harnessed men, to rote out $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ whole generacion of the Iewes, hauinge to helpe him one Gorgias a man of warre, which in matters concernynge battayls had greate experience. Nieanor ordened also the tribute (which the Romaynes shulde haue had) to be genen vnto the kynge, out of the captiuyte of the Iewes, namely, ij. M. talentes. And immediatly he sent to $\stackrel{f}{\mathrm{y}}$ cities of $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ see coost, [^956]requyringe the for to bye lewes to be their seruauntes a bonde men, promisynge to sell them lxxx. and ten for one talente: but he considered not the wrath of allmighty God, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ was to come vpon him.

When Iudas knewe of this, he tolde the Iewes ${ }^{\dot{y}}$ were with him, of Nicanors comynge. Now were there some of them fearfull, not trustinge vnto the rightuousnes of God and fled their waye. But the other ${ }^{\mathrm{t}}$ remayned, came together $a$ besought the LORDE, to delyuer the frō $\frac{t}{y}$ wieked Nieanor, which had solde the or ener he eame nye them: and though he wolde not do it for their sakes, yet for the couenaunt that he made with their fathers, a beeause they called vpon his holy a glorious name. "And so Machabeus called his men together, namely aboute vi. M. exortinge them not to agree unto their enemies, nether to be afrayed for y multitude ${ }^{b}$ of their aduersaries comynge agaynst them vnrighteously: but to fight manly, consideringe $\mathfrak{y}$ reprofe that they had done to the holy place without cause, how they had despysed and oppressed the cite, yee and destroyed $\frac{8}{y}$ lawes of the fathers. For they (sayde he) ${ }^{c}$ trust in their weapens and boldnesse, but oure confidence is in the allmighty LORDE, which in the twincklinge of an eye maye both destroye them that come agaynst rs, and all the worlde.

He exorted them also to eall to remēbraūce the helpe, that God shewed vnto their fathers: ${ }^{d}$ as whe there perished an C. a lxxxr. M. of Semacheribs people: And of $\mathfrak{y}$ battaill $\frac{t}{y}$ they had in Babilo agaynst ${ }^{\circ}$ Galacians: how $\dot{y}$ all the Macedonias $\dot{y}$ came to helpe the , stode in feare; $\pi$ how they beynge but only rj. M. slewe an C. $x \times x$. M. thorow y helpe $\frac{\dot{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ was geuen them from heauen, wherby they also had receaued many benefites.

Thorow these wordes $\stackrel{\ominus}{\mathrm{y}}$ mé toke good hertes vnto the, ready to dye for the lawe a the coūtre. So he set rpon euery coppany a captayne, one of his owne brethren : Simon, loseph and Ionathas: geuynge ech one xv. C. men. He caused Eszdras also to reade the holy boke vito them, and to geue them a token of the helpe of God.

Then he himself beinge captaine in $\dot{y}$ fore front of the battayll, ${ }^{e}$ buckled with Nicanor.

[^957]And God was there helpe, in so moch that they slewe abone ix. M. mé a compelled $\hat{y}$ more parte of Nieanors hoost to fle, they were to be at one with his sermamntes. made.
$\begin{array}{ll}\text { I Mac. } 7 . \text { c. } & \text { e Ma.4. b. } \\ & 1 \text { Re. 30, e. Deu, 20.b. }\end{array}$ so wounded and feable. Thus they toke the money from those that eame to bye the , and folowed upon them on euery syde. But whe the tyme came rpon them, they returned, for it was the Sabbath, and therfore they folowed nomore yon them. So they toke their weapens and spoyles a kepte the Sabbath. geuynge thankes vato the LORDE, which had delyuered them that daye, and shewed them his mercy. After the Sabbath they distributed the spoyles to the sicke, ${ }^{\prime}$ to $\ddot{y}$ fatherlesse, and to wyddowes, and the residue had they them selues with theirs. Whe this was done, and they all had made a generall prayer: they besought the mercifull LORDE

Of those also that were with Timothens and Bachides, which fought agaynst them, they slewe $\mathrm{xx} . \mathrm{M}$. wanne hye and stronge holdes, and denided moo spoyles: euer genynge an equall poreion vato $\grave{y}$ sicke, to $\hat{y}$ fatherles, to wyddowes a to aged persons. And when they had diligently gathered their weapés together, they layed them all in convenient places, $\underset{\text { t }}{ }$ the remmant of $\dot{y}$ spoyles brought they to lerusalem. They slewe Philarches that wicked personne, which was with Timotheus, and had vexed many lewes. And when they helde the thankesgeuynge at Ierusalem for the victory, they brent those that had set fyre on the portes of the temple : namely Calisthenes, which was fled in to an house: and so they gat a worthy rewarde for their wickednesse. As for that most nngracions Nicaur, which had bronght a thousande marchautes, to bye the lewes, he was thorow $\hat{y}$ helpe of the LORDE brought downe, euen of them whom he regarded not: in so moch that he put of his glorious raymet, fled by see, and came alone to Antioche with greate shame $\mathbb{t}$ dishonoure, which he gat thorow the destruccion of his hoost. Thus he ${ }^{\dot{y}}$ promysed the Romaynes to paye the their tribute, when he toke lernsalem: begame now to saye planely, that God was $f$ defender of the Iewes, a therfore not possible to wounde them, beeause they folowed $\dot{y}$ lawes which God had

AT the same tyme came Intiochus agayne with "dishonoure out of Persis. For when he came to D'ersepolis, and molertoke to robbe the temple and to sublue the cite, the people rame together and defended them selues, in so moch $\frac{t}{y}$ he and his were fayne to fle with shame. And so after that flight, it happened, that Antiochus came agayne with dishonoure. But when he came to Egbathana, he gat knowlege what was happened vnto Niemor t Timotheus. Now as he was anauncinge himself in his wrath, he thought he was able to avenge the iniury that was done to them, rpon the Iewes: and therfore commaunded to make ready his charet, haistinge on his iourney without ceassinge: the iurgmēt of God prouokynge him, because he had spoke so proudly, that he wolde come to Ierusalem, and make it a grane of the Iewes. But the LORDE God of lsrael, ${ }^{b}$ that seith all thinges, smote him with an incisible plage, which no man coude heale.
For as soone as he had spoken these wordes, there came vpon him an horrible payne of his bowels, ta sore grefe of the tharmes. And $\frac{t}{y}$ was but right: for he had martired other mens bowels with dyuerse and strange tormentes, how be it he wolde in no wyse ceasse from his malice. Yee he was yet the prouder, and more malicious agarnst the lewes: But whyle he was commaundinge to make haist in the matter, it happened $\frac{\mathrm{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ he fell downe violently from the charet, so $\stackrel{t}{\mathrm{y}}$ it brussed his borly, x dyd him greate payne.

And so he that thought he might commaunde ${ }^{\circ}$ floudes of the see (so proude was he beyonde the condicio of man) and to weye the hye mountaynes in a payre of scoales, was now brought downe to the grounde, a caried rpon an horszlytter, knowlegynge $\dot{8}$ manyfest power of God vpon him : so that ${ }^{\text {y }}$ wicked body of his ${ }^{c}$ was full of wormes, which in his payne fell quyek out of his flesh: In so moch $t$ his hoost was greued with the smell aud styncke of him. Thus he that a litle afore thought he might reach to the starres of heauen, him might no man now abyde ner boare, for the vehemence of styncke.

Therfore he beynge brought from his greate pryde, begane for to come to y knowlege of him self: for the punyshment of God warned him, a his payne increased euer more a more. And when he him self might not abyde his owne styncke, he sayde these wordes: lt is reason to be obedient mnto God, a that a man desyre not to be like vnto him. This wicked personne prayed also vnto the LORDE, of whom he shulde have optained no mercy. And as for the cite that he came vnto so haistely, to brynge it downe to the grounde, a to make it a graue for deed men: now he desyreth to delyuer it fre. And as touchinge fy Iewes, whom he had iudged not worthy to be buried, but wolde haue cast the out for to be deuoured of the foules and wylde beastes, sayenge, that he wolde haue destroyed both olde and yonge: Now he promiseth, to make the like $\dot{y}$ eitesyns of Athens. And where as he had spoyled the holy temple afore, now he maketh promyse to garnish it with greate giftes, to increase the holy ornamētes, and of his owne rentes to beare the costes and charges belonginge to the offerynges: yee and that he wolde also become a lewe him self, to go thorow euery place of the worlde, and to preach the power of God.

But when his paynes wolde not ceasse, (for the righteous iudgmēt of God was come rpon him) out of a very despayre he wrote rnto the Iewes a lettre of intercession, cōteyninge these wordes: The kynge and prynce Antiochus wysheth suto the rertuous eitesyns of the lewes, moch health and good prosperite.

If ye and youre children fare well, and yf all thinges go after youre mynde: we geue greate thankes. In my sicknesse also do 1 remembre you louyngly: for as 1 came out of Persia, and was taken with sore disease: I thought it necessary to care for the eomon wealth. Nether despare I in my self, but have a good hope to eseape this sieknes.

But considerynge that my father led an hoost some tyme in $\stackrel{f}{y}$ hyer places, a shewed who shulde raigne after him, that (yf there happened eny cotrouersy, or eny harde thinge were declared,) they in the londe might knowe their chefe lorde, ${ }^{t}$ there shulde be no insurreceion: Agayne, when I pondre by my self, how that all $\dot{y}$ mightie men and neghbours rounde aboute, are layēge waite, and loke but for oportunyte to do harme: I haue ordened that my sonne Antiochus shall raigne after me, whom I oft commended to many of you, when I was in the hyer kyngdomes, and haue wrytten vnto him as it foloweth herafter. Therfore I praye you and requyre you, to remembre the benefites that I haue done vnto you generally and in especiall. For I hope that he shall be of sober d louynge behauoure, and of he folowe my deuyce, he shal be indifferent vnto you.
${ }^{a}$ Thus that murthurer and blasphemer of God was sore smytté: and like as he had intreated other men, so he dyed a myserable death in a straunge countre vpon a mountayne. And his body dyd Philippe (that wēte with him) cary awaye: which fearynge the sonne of Antiochus, wente in to Egipte to Ptolomy Philometor.

The r. Clyapter.

MACHABEUS now a his company ${ }^{b}$ (thorow the helpe of the LORDE) wanne the temple and the cite agayne, destroyed the aulters and chapels that the Heithe had buylded thorow the stretes: ${ }^{c}$ clensed the temple, made another aulter of bricke stone, and after ij. yeares they offered sacrifices, set forth the incense, the lightes and shewe bred. When that was done, they fell downe flat ypon the grounde, and besought the LORDE, that they might come nomore in to soch trouble: but yf they synned eny more agaynst him, he him self to chasten them with mercy, and not to come in the hondes of those aleauntes and blasphemous men.

Now vpon the same daye that y straungers poluted the temple, it happened that on the very same daye it was clensed agayne: ${ }^{d}$ namely, the xxij. daye of the moneth called Casleu. They kepte viij. dayes in gladnesse, like as in the feast of the tabernacles: remembrynge that not longe afore, they helde the feast of $\mathfrak{y}$ tabernacles vpon the mountaynes and in dennes like beastes. And to y same token they bare grene bowes, braunches and palmes before him that had geuen them good fortune to clense his place. They agreed also together, and made a statute, $\frac{\dot{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ euery yeare those dayes shulde be solemply kepte of all the people of the Iewes.

How Antiochus then (that was called the noble) dyed, it is sufficiently tolde. Now wil we speake of Nicanor the sonne of that [^958]wicked Antiochus, how it happened with him: and so with few wordes to comprehende the aduersite that chaunsed in $\dot{y}$ warres. When he had taken in the kyngtome, he made one Lysias (which had bene captayne of the hoost in Phenices and Syria) ruler ouer the matters of the realme. For Ptolomy that was called Macron, beynge a ruler for the Iewes (and specially, to syt in iudgment for soch wronge as was done vnto them) vndertoke to deale peaceably with them. For the which cause he was accused of the frendes before Eupator: and when he was suspecte to be a traytoure (because he had left Cypers, that Philometor had committed vnto him: and because he departed from noble Antiochus, that he was come vnto) he poysoned himself, and dyed.

Now when Gorgias was gouernoure of the same places, he toke straungers and vndertoke oft tymes to warre with ${ }^{\circ}$ I Iewes. Morouer the Idumeans that helde the stroge holdes, receaued those that were dryuen from Ierusalem, and toke in honde to warre also. But they that were with Machabeus, besought and prayed mnto the LORDE, ${ }^{e}$ that he wolde be their helper: and so they fell in to the stronge holdes of the Idumeans, © wanne many places by strength: Soch as came agaynst them they slew, and kylled no lesse (of all together) then twentye thousande. Neuerthelesse some (no lesse then nyne thousande) were fled in to two stronge towres, hauynge all maner of ordinaunce to withstonde them.

Then Machabeus leauynge Symon, Iosephus, Zachaus and those that were with them, (which were very many) wente to besege thē, and to fight where most nede was. Now they that were with Symon beynge led with couetousnesse, were intreated for money, thorow certayne of those that laye in the towers: toke lxx. M. drachmas, a let some of them escape. But when it was tolde Machabeus what had happened, he called $\dot{y}$ captaynes of the people together, accusynge those personnes, that they had solde the brethren for money, and let their enemies go. So he slewe those traytours, a immediatly wente in honde with the ij. towers. And when they had ordred them selues manly with their weapens $\mathbb{a}$ hondes, they slewe in $y$ two castels moo thē twētie thousande.

[^959]1 ㅊorm Timotheus whom the Lewes had कutercome afore, sathered a multituke of Hramuge people, brought an hoost also of homsinen of the Asians, to wyme Iewry by 玉玉 trength. But when he drewe nỵ, Machabeus and they that were with him fell to their prayer. ${ }^{\circ}$ "prencted aszones won their heades, beyige syrded with hayrie cloth aboute their bines, foil downe before $\hat{y}$ aulter, a besought the LORDE that he wolde be mercifull to them. but an cnemic vntu, their enemies, and to take parte agaynt their aduersaries, acordinge as it is promised in the lawe. So after the prayer,' they wente on further from the cite: anit when they came nye the enemies, they prepareel them selnes agaynst them.

Aud by tymes in the mornynge at $\dot{y}$ breake of the daye, both the hoostes buckled together. The ore parte had the LORDE for their refuge, which is the geuer of prooperite, strigth and victory. The other had a maily stomack, which is a captayne of warre.

The battayll now beynge greate, there 'apeared ruto the enemies from heauen v . men, ypon horszback with brydels of golde, lectinge the lewes, and two of them hauynge Machabeus betwiste them, $\frac{\dot{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ kepte him safe on enery syde with their weapes, but shot dartes and lighteninges rpon the enemies. where thorow they were confounded with blynduesse and so sore afrayed, that they fell downe. There were slayne of fote men twenty thousande and fyue hundreth, and f5) sixe hüdreth horsmen. As for Timotheus him self, he fled vnto Gazar a very strōge holke, wherin Cereas was captayne. But Nachabens and his company layed sege to it cherfully iiij. dayes. Now they that were within, trustinge to the strength of the place, cursed $\frac{1}{}$ banned exceadingly, and made greate crakynge with wicked wordes. Neuerthelesse yon the fifth daye in the mornynge, x. yonge men of Machabeus cōpany, beynge set on fyre in their myndes because of the blasphemy: came manfully vnto the wall, and with bolde stomackes they and their other companyons (clymmed up ipon the towres, vndertakynge tio set fyre vpou the pertes, it to bume those blatplemumb personnes quycke. Two dayes were they de-trovenge the castell, which when [^960]they femude 'Timotheus (that was crepte in to a corner) they kylled him, and slewe Cereas his brother in like maner with $\Lambda$ ppollophanes. When this was donc, they sunge Psalmes, with prayses and thankesgeuyuges vito the LORDE, which had done so greate thinges for Israel, $\mathbb{\imath}$ genen them the victory.

©ly xi . ©hapter.

NOT longe after this, Lysias the kynges stewarde and a kynsman of his, (which had the gouernaunce of his matters, ) toke sore displeasure for the thinges that had happened: and when he had gathered lvxx. M. men of fote with all the hoost of the horsmen, he came agaynst the lewes, thinkynge to wyme the cite, to make it an habitacion for the Heithen, ${ }^{f}$ and the temple wolde he have to be au house of lucre, like as the other goddes houses of the Heithē are, a to sell $\dot{y}$ prestes office euery yeare: Not consideringe the power of God, but was wylde in his mynde, trustinge in ẙ multitude of fote mé, ${ }^{5}$ in thousandes of horsmé, and in his lxxx. Elephantes.
so he came in to Iewry a then to Bethsura w (a castell of defence lyenge in a narow place, v. furlonges from lerusajē) and wanne it. Now when Machabeus and his company knew that the stronge holdes were taken, they fell to their prayers ${ }^{n}$ with wepynge and teares before the LORDE: and all the people in like maner besought him, that he wolde sende a good angell to delyuer Israel. Nachabeus him self was the first that made him ready to the battayll, exortynge the other that were with him, to ioperde themselues and to helpe their brethrē. And when they were goyenge forth of lerusalem' together with a ready and wyllynge mynde, there apeared before thê poon horszbacke a mā in whyte clothinge with harnesse of golde, shakinge his speare. Then they praysed y LORDE all together, which had shewed them merey, and were conforted in their myndes: in so moch that they were ready, not only to fight with men, but with $\hat{y}$ most cruell beestes, yee and to rume thorow walles of yron.

Thus they wente on wyllingly hauynge an helper from heane, and the LORDE mercifull vito them. They fell mightely vpon their enemies like lyons, brought downe xjM. fote men, xyj. C. horsmen, put all $y$ other to flight, many of them beynge wounded, and some gat awaye naked. Yee Lysias himself was fayne to fle shamefully, and so to escape. Neuerthelesse the man was not without vnderstondinge, but considered by himself that his power was mynished, and pondred how $\hat{y}$ Lewes beynge defended by the helpe of Nilmighty God, were not able to be ouereome: wherfore he sent them worde, and promised, that he wolde consente to all thinges which were reasonable, and to make the kynge their frede. To the which prayer of Lysias Machabeus agreed, sekynge in all thinges the comon wealth : and what so euer Machabeus wrote vato Lysias cöcernynge the Iewes, the kynge gramted it. For there were lettres writte suto $\dot{y}$ Iewes from Lysias conteynynge these wordes:

Lysias sendeth gretinge to the people of the Iewes. Ihon and Absalon which were sent from you, delyucred me wrytinges, and requyred me to fulfill the thinges concernynge their earande. Therfore loke what might be graunted, I certified $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ kynge therof: and what so euer was conuenient, I agreed therto. If ye now wyll be faithfull in the matters, I shal endeuer my self herafter also to do you good. $\Lambda$ s concernynge other thinges by euery article therof: I have committed them to youre messaungers, and to those whom 1 sent vato you, to comon with you of the same, fare ye well, In the hudreth and xlviij. yeare, the xxiiij. daye of the moneth Dioscorinthius.

Now the kynges lettre contegned these wordes: Kynge Antiochus sendeth gretinge vnto his brother Lysias. ${ }^{a}$ For so moch as oure father is now deed, oure wyh is, that they which are in oure realme, lyue without eny insurreccion, and euery man to be diligent in his owne matters. We vnderstonde also, that the lewes wolde not cousent to oure father, for to be brought vnto the custome of the Gentiles, but stiffly to kepe their owne statutes: for the which cause they requyre of vs also, to let them remayne still by their owne lawes.

Wherfore oure minde is, that this people shalbe in rest: we have concluded and determed also, to restore them their temple agayne: that they maye lyue acordinge to the

And this was the lettre, that the kynge wrote vuto the Iewes: Kynge Antiochus sendeth gretinge moto the councell and the other people of the Icwes. If ye fare well, we haue onre desyre: as for vs, we are in good health. Menelaus came and tolde vs, how $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ youre desyre was to come downe to youre people, which are with vs.

WHEN these couenauntes were made, Lysias wente whto the kynge, and $\dot{y}$ lewes tylled their grounde. But Timotheus, Appolionius the some of Gemei, Ierome and Demophon $\dot{y}$ proude, Nicanor $\dot{y}$ captayne of Cypers, and they that laye in those places: wolde not let them lyue in rest and peace. They of Ioppa also dyd euen soch a shamefull dede: They prayed $\dot{y}$ lewes that dwelt amōge them, to go with their wyues and children in to the shippes which they had prepared, $\pi$ dyd with them, as though they had ought them no euell wyll. For so moch then as there was gone forth a generall proclamacio thorow $\dot{y}$ cite because of peace, they consented therto, and suspecte nothinge: but when they were gone forth in to the depe, they drowned no lesse then ij. C. of them.

Whe Iudas knew of this cruelte shewed vnto his people, he eommaunded those that were with him to make them ready, exortinge them to call זpon God the righteous iudge: wète forth agaynst those murthurers of his brethre, set fyre in $\hat{y}$ hauen by night, brent ${ }^{v} 1$ ' $\hat{y}$ shippes, and those that escaped from the fyre, he slewe with the swearde. And when he had done this, he departed as though he wolde come agayne, and rote out all them of Ioppa. But when he had gottē worde that the lamnites were mynded to do in like maner vinto $\hat{y}$ lewes which dwelt amonge them, he came vpon the Iamnites by night, and set fyre in the hauen with the shippes: so that the light of the fyre was sene at Ierusalem, rpon a ij. C. r xl. furlonges.

Now when they were gone from thence ix. furlonges, in their iourney towarde Ti motheus: v. thousande men of fote and v . hundreth horsmen of the Arabians fought with him. So when the batell was earnest, and prospered with Iudas thorow the helpe of God: yf residue of the Arabians beynge ouercome, besought Iudas to be at one with them, and promised to geue him certayne pastures, a to do him good in other thinges. Iudas thynkynge that they shulde in dede be profitable concernynge many thynges, promised them peace: whervpon they shoke hondes, and so they departed to their tentes. Iudas wente also vnto a cite, which was very fast kepte with brydges, fensed rounde aboute with walles, a dyuerse kyndes of people dwellinge therin, called Caspin.
$\mathbb{C}^{-}$They that were within it, put soch trust in the strength of the walles, $\mathbb{c}$ in their stoare of vytales: that they were the slacker in their doynges, cursinge and reuylinge Iudas with blasphemies, and speakynge soch wordes as it becommeth not. But Machabeus callynge mpon the greate prynce of $\dot{y}$ worlde (which without eny battayll rammes or ordinaunce of warre, ${ }^{\circ}$ dyd cast downe the walles of Iericho, in the tyme of Iosue) fell manfully vpon the walles, toke the cite, and (thorow the helpe of the LORDE) made an exceadinge greate slaughter: In so moch that a lake of ij. furloges brode which laye therby, semed to flowe with the bloude of the slayne.

Then departed they from thence vij. C. and L. furlonges, and cane to Taraca vnto ŷ lewes that are called Tubianei. But as for Timotheus, they coude not get him there: for (not one matter dispatched, ) he was departed from thence, and had lefte certayne men in a very stronge holde. But Dositheus and Sosipater which were captaynes with Machabeus, slewe those $\mathrm{y}_{\mathrm{y}}^{\mathrm{t}}$ Timotheus had lefte in the house of defence, euen x. M. men. And Machabeus prepared him with $\frac{y}{y}$ vj. M. men $\frac{t}{y}$ were aboute him, set them in ordre by companies, and weute forth agaynst Timotheus, which had with him an C . and xx . M. men of fote, ij. M. and v. C. horsmē.

When Timotheus had knowlege of Iudas commynge, he sent the women, children and the other baggage vnto a castell called Carnion. (For it coude not be wonne, a was harde to come vnto, the wayes of the same places were so narow) and when ludas copany came first in sight, the enemies were smytten with feare, thorow the presence of God, which seyth all thinges: In so moch $\frac{t}{y}$ they fleynge one here, another there, were rather discomfited of their owne people, ${ }^{b}$ wounded with the strokes of their owne sweardes. Iudas also was very earnest in folowinge rpon them and punyshinge those vngodly, and slewe xxx. M. men of them. Timotheus also himself fell in to the hondes of Dositheus a Sosipater, whom he besought with many prayers, to let him go with his life: because he had many of the Iewes fathers and brethren in preson, which (yf they put him to death) might be disapoynted. So when he had promised faithfully to delyuer them agayne acordinge to the condicion made, they let him go without harme, for the health of $\dot{y}$ brethren. And when ludas had slayne xxv. M, he wente from Carnion.

Now after ${ }_{y}^{t}$ he had chased awaye and slayne his enemies, he remoued the hoost towarde Ephron a strōge cite, ${ }^{\text {c }}$ wherin dwelt many dyuerse people of the Heithen, and y stronge yonge men kepte the walles, defendinge the mightely. In this cite was moch ordinaunce, and prouysion of dartes. ${ }^{d}$ But when Indas and his company had called vpon Allmighty [^962]God, (which with his power breaketh the strength of the enemies) they wanne the cite, and slew xxv. M. of them $\frac{t}{y}$ were within. From thence wente they to the cite of the Scythians, which lieth vj. C. furlonges from Ierusalem. But when ${ }_{\mathrm{y}}^{\mathrm{y}}$ Iewes which were in the cite testified, that the citesyns dealte louyngly with them, yee and intreated them kyndly in y tyme of their aduersite, Iudas and his company gaue them thankes, desyringe them to be frendly still vnto them: ${ }^{a}$ and so they came to Ierusalem the hye feast of the wekes beynge at honde. And after the feast they weete forth agaynst Gorgias the gouernoure of Idumea, with iij. M. men of fote and iiij. C. horsmè. Which when they met together, it chaunsed a few of the Iewes to be slayne.

And Dositheus one of the Bachenors a mighty horsmā toke holde of Gorgias, and wolde haue takē him quyke. But an horsmā of Thracia fell vpon him, and smote of his arme, so that Gorgias escaped and fled in to Moresa. When they now that were of Gorgias syde, had foughtē longe and were weery: Iudas called vpon the LORDE that he wolde be their helper, a captayne of the felde: and with that, he beganne with a manly voyce to take up a songe of prayse, and a crie: In so moch that he made the enemies afrayed, and Gorgias men of warre to take their flight. So Iudas gathered his hoost, and came in to $\dot{y}$ cite of Odolla. And when the seuenth daye came vpon them, they clensed them selues (as the custome was) a kepte the Sabbath in the same place. And vpon the daye folowinge, Iudas $\mathbb{t}$ his company came to take vp the bodies of them that were slayne, and to bury them in $\dot{y}$ fathers graues. Now vnder $\dot{y}$ cotes of certayne Iewes which were slayne, they founde lewels that they had taken out of the temple and from the Idols of the Iamniters: which thinge is ${ }^{\circ}$ forbydden the Iewes by the lawe. Then euery man sawe y this was the cause, wherfore they were slayne.

And so euery man gaue thankes vnto the LORDE for his righteous iudgmēt, which had opened the thinge that was hyd. They fell downe also vnto their prayers, and besought God, that the fawte which was made, might be put out of remembraunce. Besydes that, Iudas exorted ẙ people earnestly, to kepe them selues from soch synne: for so moch as they sawe before their eyes, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ these men were slayne for the same offence. So he gathered of euery one a certayne, in so moch that he: brought together* two thousande drachmas of syluer, which he sent vnto Ierusalem, $\frac{t}{y}$ there might a sacrifice be offred for the myszdede. In the which place he dyd well a right: for he had some cösideracion $\pi$ pondringe of $\dot{y}$ life $\frac{t}{y}$ is after this tyme. For yf he had not thought $\frac{t}{y}$ they, which were slayne, dyd yet lyue, it had bene superfluous and vayne, to make eny rowe or sacrifice, for the ${ }^{\text {t }}$ were deed. But for so moch as he sawe, that they which dye in the fauoure a beleue of God, are in good rest t ioye, he thought it to be good $\square$ honorable for a reconcylinge, to do the same for those which were slayne, that the offence might be forgeuen.

IN the Cxlix. yeare gat Iudas knowlege, ${ }^{\text {' }} \mathrm{y}$ Antiochus Eupator was commynge with a greate power in to lewry, a Lysias the stewarde a ruler of his matters with him : hauynge an C. and x. M. men of fote, v. M. horsmen, xxij. Elephantes, and iij. C. charettes. Menelaus also ioyned him self with them (but with greate disceate) a spake fayre to the kynge, not for eny good of y coütre, but because he thought to haue bene made some greate man of auctorite. But the kynge of kynges moued Antiochus mynde agaynst this mogodly personne, © Lysias infourned the kynge, that this Menelaus was the cause of all myschefe: ${ }^{d}$ so that of kynge commaunded to take him, and (as $\dot{8}$ maner of them is) to put him rnto death in the same place.

There was also in the same place a tower of L. cubites hye, heaped with aszshes: but aboue it was so made, that men might loke downe on euery syde. Where in to the kynge commaunded that shamefull person to be cast amonge the aszshes, as one that was cause of all vngraciousnesse. And reason it was, $\dot{f}$ y vnthrift shulde dye soch a death, and not to be buried: for he had done moch myschefe minto the aulter of God (whose fyre and aszshes were holy) therfore was it right, $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ he him self also shulde be destroyed with aszshes.

[^963]But the kynge was workde in his mynde, $r$ came to shewe lime self more crncll wato the Iowes, then his father was. ${ }^{a}$ Which when Iudas preateded, he commamuled the people to eall ypon the LOROE night and daye: that he woklde now helpe them also, like as he had done allwaye: (For they were afrayed to be put from their lawe, from their naturall countre and from $¢$ holy temple:) and not to suffre the people" (which al litle whyle afore beganne to reconer) to be subdued agayne of $\hat{y}$ blasphemons nacions.

So when they had done this together, and besought the LORDE for mercy, with wepruge and fastinge thre dayes longe, flat vpon the gromuk: ludas exorted them, to make them solues ready. But he and the elders together denysed, to go forth first with their perole, afore the kynge brought his hoost in to lewry, and afore he beseged the cite, $\pi$ so to committe the matter unto God. Wherfore he aserybed the power of all thinges unto God the maker of $\frac{y}{y}$ worlde, exortinge his people to fight manfully, (yee euen into (leath) for $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ lawes, the temple, $\hat{\mathrm{y}}$ eite, their owne natyue countre, $\pi$ to defende $y$ citesyns: $\tau$ set his hoost before Modin. He gaue them also $\frac{t}{y}$ were with him, a token of $\dot{y}$ victory of God, chosinge out the manlyest yonge men, wente by night in to the kynges pauylion, ${ }^{\text {s }}$ slewe of the hoost xiiij. M. men, and the greatest Elephantes, with those that sat vpon them.
D Thus when they had brought a greate feare a rumoure amonge $\dot{y}$ tentes of their enemies, and all thinges wente prosperously with them, they departed in the breake of $\dot{y}$ daye, God beynge their helper a defender. Now when the kynge perceaued the manlynesse of the Iewes, he wente aboute to take the stronge places by eraft, a remoued his hoost wnto " Bethsura, whieh was a wel kepte house of defence of the lewes: but they were chaterd awaye, hurte and discomfited. And hudas sent ronto them that were in it, soch thinges as were neeessary. In the Iewes hoou also there was one Rhodocus, which twhed the encmies their secretes: but they songht him out, and when they had gotten him, they put him in preson. After this dyd the kinge comon with them that were in Bethsura, toke truce with them, departed, and stroke a battayll with Iudas, which ouereame him.

But when he vnderstode, that Philippe (whom he had left to be ouerseer of his busynesses at Antioche) begāne to rebell agaynst him, he was astomied in his mynde: so that he yelded himself to the Iewes, and made then an ooth, to do what so euer they thought right. Now when he was reconcyled with them, he offred, made moch of the temple, gane greate gyftes vinto it, enbraced Machabeus, makynge him eaptayne and gouernoure from Ptolomais vato $\hat{y}$ Gerrenes.

Nenerthelesse when he came to Ptolomais, the people of the eite were not content with that bonde of frendshipe: for they were afrayed, that he wolde breake the couenaunt. Then wente Lysias vp in to the seate, and enformed the people, shewed the the cause why, and pacified them. So he came agayne to Antioche. This is now the matter concernynge $y$ kynges iourney, and his returne.

AFTER thre yeares was Iudas infourmed, how that Demetrius the sonne of Se lencus was come vp with a greate power and shippes, thorow the hauen of Tripolis (to take certayne commodions places and countrees) agaynst Antiochus and his captayne Lysias. Now Alcimus (which had bene hye prest, and wilfully defyled himself, in the tyme of the myxtinge) seynge, that by no meanes he coude be helped, ner haue eny more intraunce to the altare : he came to kynge Demetrius in the hundreth and one and fiftie yeare, presentinge wito him a crowne of golde, a palme and an olyue tre: which (as men thought) belonged to the temple, and that daye he helde his tonge.

But when he had gotten oportunite for his madnesse, Demetrius called him to coūcell, and axed him, what thinges or councels the Iewes leaned into? He answered: The lewes that be ealled $\Lambda$ ssidei (whose captayne is Iudas Machabeus) maynteyne warres, make insurreccions, and wyl not let the realme be in peace.

For I beynge depryued of my fathers honoure (I meane the hye presthode) am come hither: partly because I was faithfull vnto the kynge, and partly beeause I sought the profit of the citesyns. And why? all oure people (thorow the wickednesse of them) are not a litle troubled. Wherfore I beseke the (o kynge) considre all these thinges diligently, and then make some prouysion for the londe and the people, acordinge to the kyndnesse that thou hast offred vnto them. For as longe as Iudas hath the vpper hande, it is not possible that men can lyue in peace.

When he had spoken these wordes, other frendes also hauynge euell will at Iudas, set the kynge Demetrius on fyre agaynst him. Which immediatly sent Nicanor (ruler of $\dot{y}$ elephantes) a captayne, in to Iewry: commaundinge him, to take Iudas himself alyue, but to slaye them that were with him, and to make Alcimus hye prest of the temple.

Then the Heithen which fled out of Iewry from Iudas, came to Nieanor by flockes, thinkynge the harme and decaye of the Iewes to be their welfare. Now whe the Iewes herde of Nicanors commynge, at the gatherynge together of $\frac{8}{y}$ Heithé : they "sprēckled them selues with earth, and besought him (which made them his people, and euer defended his owne poreion with euydent tokens) that he wolde preserue them still. So at the commaundement of the captayne, they remoued from thence, and came to a towne called Dessasan. And Symon Iudas brother fell in honde with Nicanor, but thorow the sodane commynge of the enemies, he was afrayed.

Neuertheles Nicanor hearinge the manlynes of them that were with Iudas, and $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ bolde stomackes that they had to fight for their naturall countre, darst not proue the matter with bloudsheddinge. Wherfore he sent Possidonius, Theodocius a Mathias before, to geue and to take peace. So when they had taken longe advysement there vpon, and the captayne shewed it vnto the multitude: they were agreed in one mynde, to hane peace. And they appoynted a daye to syt vpon these matters quyetly amonge them selues, $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ stoles also were brought and set forth. Neuerthelesse Iudas cōmaunded certaine men of armes to waite in conueniēt places. lest there shulde sodenly aryse eny enell thorow the enemies. And so they commoned reasonably together.

Nicanor, whyle he abode at Ierusalem, a 2 Ma. 10. c.
ordred himself not vnreasonably, but sent awaye the people that were gathered together. He loued Iudas euer with his hert, and fauoured him. He prayed him also to take a wyfe, and to brynge forth children. So he maried, lyued in rest, and they led a comon life. But Alcimus perceauynge the loue that was betwixte them, and how they were agreed together, came to Demetrius, and tolde him that Nicanor had taken straunge matters in honde, and ordened Iudas (an enemy of the realme) to be the kynges successoure. Then the kinge was sore displeased, and thorow the wicked accusations which Alcimus made of Nicanor, he was so prouoked, that he wrote vnto Nicanor, sayenge: that he was very angrie for the frendshipe and agrement, which he had made with Machabeus. Neuertheles he commaunded him in all the haist, that he shulde take Machabeus presoner, and sende him to Antioche.

Which lettres when Nicanor had sene, he was at his wittes ende, and sore greued, that he shulde breake the thinges, wherin they had agreed: specially, seynge Machabeus was the man, that neuer dyd him harme. But because he might not withstonde the kynge, he sought oportunite to fulfil his commaundement. Notwithstondinge when Machabeus sawe that Nicanor beganne to be churlish vnto him, and that he intreated him more rughly then he was wonte, he perceaued that soch vnkyndnes came not of good, and therfore he gathered a few of his men, and withdrewe himself fro Nicanor. Which when he knewe that Machabeus had manfully preuented him, he came in to the greate and most holy temple: and commaunded the prestes (which were doynge their vsuall offeringes) to delyuer him the man. And when they sware that they coude not tell, where the mā was whō he sought, he stretched out his honde, and made an ooth, sayenge : Yf ye wyll not delyuer me Iudas ${ }^{b}$ captyue, I shall remone this temple of God in to the playne felde, I shal breake downe the aulter, and consecrate this tēple into Bachus. After these wordes he departed.

Then the prestes lift vp their hondes towarde heauen, and besought him that was euer the defender of their people, sayenge:
${ }^{b} 1$ Mac. 7.e.

Thou o LORDE of all, which hast nerte of nothinge, woldest that the temple of thy habitacion shulde be amonge vs. Therfore now (o most holy LORDE) kepe this ${ }^{a}$ house euer molefyled, which lately was clensed. Now was there accused into Nicanor, one Razis an Alderman of Ierusalem, a loner of the whole cite, and a man of good reporte: which for the kynde hert that he bare vnto the people, was called a father of $\dot{y}$ Iewes. This man oft tymes (when the lewes were mymed to kepe them selues indefyled) defended and delywered them, beynge content stedfastly to spende his body and his life for his people.

So Nicanor wyllinge to declare the hate, that he bare to the lewes, sent fyue hundreth men to take him: for he thought, yf he gat him, he shulde brynge the lewes in greate decaye. Now when the people beganne to ruszshe in at his house, to breake the dores, and to set fyre on it: he beynge now taken, wolde hane defended himself with his swearde: ehosinge rather to dre manfully, then to yelde himselfe to those wicked doers: and because of his noble stocke, he had rather haue bene put to extreme cruelte.

Notwithstondynge what tyme as he myssed of his stroke for haist, and the multitude fell in violently betwixte the dores: he rane boldly to $\dot{\hat{y}}$ wall, a cast himself downe manfully amonge the heape of them, which gaue soone place to his fall, so that he fell ypon his bely. Neuerthelesse whyle there was yet breath within him, he was kynotletl in his mynde: and whyle his bloude guszshed out exceadingly (for he was very sore wounded) he rame thorow the myddest of $\frac{y}{y}$ people, and gat him to the toppe of a rocke. So when his bloude was now gone, he toke out his owne bowels with both his hondes, and threw them spon the people: callinge vpon the LORDE of life and sprete, to rewarde him this agayne, and so he dyed.

A OW when Nicanor knewe that Iudas was in the countre of "Samaria, he thought with all his power to strike a felde with hin ypon a Sabbath daye. Neuerthelesse the lewes that were compelled to go with him, sayed: O do not so cruelly and 1. Nac. 1.". zM Mae. 10. a. "1 Mae. 7 . d.
monyndly, but halowe $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ Sabbath daye, and worshipe him that seyth all thinges. For all this, yet sayed the ingracious persome: ${ }^{c}$ Is there a mightie one in heauen, that commaunded the Sabbath daye to be kepte? And when they sayde: yee the lyuynge God, the mightie LORDE in heauen commaunded the senenth dlaye to be kepte, ${ }^{d}$ he sayde: And I am mightie spon earth, to commaunde them for to arme them selues, and to perfourme the kynges busynesse. Notwithstondinge he might not haue his purpose.

Nicanor had deuysed with greate pryde to ouercome Iudas, and to brynge awaye $\dot{y}$ victory. But Maehabeus had euer a fast confidēce and a parfecte hope in God that he wolle helpe him, and exorted his people, not to be afrayed at the commynge of the Heithen: but allwaye to remembre the helpe that had bene shewed unto them from heauen, yee and to be sure now also, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ Allmightie God wolde geue them the victory. He spake minto them out of the lawe and prophetes, puttinge them in remembraunce of the battayls, that they had striken afore, © made them to be of a good corage.

So when their hartes were plucte vp , he shewed them also the disceatfulnesse of the Heithen, and how they wolde kepe no couenaunt ner ooth. Thus he weapened the not with the armoure of shylde and speare, but with wholsome wordes and exortacions. He shewed them a dreame also, wherthorow he mate them all glad, which was this: He thought that he sawe Onias (which had bene hye prest, a vertuous © lousnge man, sad, and of honest comuersacion, well spoken, and one that had bene exercised in godlynes fro a childe) holdinge vp his hōdes towarde heauen, and prayenge for his people. After this there apeared unto him another ma, which was aged, honorable and glorious. And Onias sayde: This is a louer of the brethren, and of the people of lsrael. This is he that prayeth moch for the people, and for all the holy cite: Iereny the prophet of God. He thought also $\frac{t}{}$ T leremy helde out his right hōde, and gane him (namely rnto ludas) a swearde of golde, sayenge: 'Take this holy swearde, a gifte from God, wherwith thou shalt smyte downe the enemies of the people of Israel.

And so they were wel conforted thorow the wordes of Iudas, and toke corage nnto thē, so that the yonge men were determed in their myndes to fight, a to byde styfly at it: In so moch that in the thinges which they toke in honde, their boldnesse shewed the same, because the holy cite and the temple were in parell: for the which they toke more care, then for their wyues, children, brethre and kynsfolkes. Agayne, they that were in the cite, were most carefull for those which were to fight. Now when they were all in a hope that the iudgment of the matter was at hode, and the enemies drew nye, the hoost beynge set in araye, the Elephantes and horsme euery one stondinge in his place: Machabeus considered the commynge of the multitude, D the ordinaunce of dyuerse weapens, the cruelnesse of the beestes, and helde vp his hondes towarde heauen, callinge vpon the LORDE that doth wonders, which geueth not the victory after the "multitude of weapens and power of the hoost (but to them that please him) acordinge to his owne will. Therfore in his prayer he sayde these wordes:
${ }^{b}$ O LORDE, thou that diddest sende thine angell in the tyme of Ezechias kynge of Iuda, and in the hoost of Sennacherib slewest an hundreth and fyue and foure score thousande: sende now also thy good angell before vs (o LORDE of heauens) in the fearfulnesse and drede of thy mightie arme, that they which come agaynst thy holy people to blaspheme them, maye be afrayed. And so he made an ende of his wordes. Then Nicanor and they that were with him, drew nye with shawmes and songes: but Iudas and his company with prayer and callinge vpon God.

[^964]With their hondes they smote, but with their hertes they prayed vito the LORDE, and slewe no lesse then xxxv. M. mé: For thorow the present helpe of God they were gloriously conforted.

Now when they left of, and were turninge agayne with ioye, they vnderstode that Nicanor himself was slayne with the other. Then they gaue a greate shoute and a crie, praysinge the allinighty LORDE with a loude voyce. And Iudas (which was euer ready to spende his body and life for his citesyns) commaunded to smyte of Nicanors heade, with his arme and honde, and to be brought to Ierusalem. When he came there, he called all the people, and the prestes at the aulter with those that were in $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ castell, and shewed them Nicanors heade, and his wicked honde, which he had presumptuously holden vp agaynst the temple of God. He caused $\frac{9}{y}$ tonge also of that vngodly Nicanor to be cut in litle peces, and to be cast to the foules, and the cruell mans honde to be hanged vp before the temple.

So euery man gaue thankes vnto y ${ }^{\circ}$ LORDE, saienge : blessed be he, that hath kepte his place vndefyled.

As for Nicanors heade, he hanged it vp vpo the hye castell, for an euydent and playne token of the helpe of God. And so they agreed all together, to kepe that daye holy: namely $\dot{y}$ xiij. daye of $\dot{f}$ moneth Adar, which in ${ }^{\circ}$ Syriās language is called $\mathfrak{y}$ nexte daye before Mardocheus daye. Thus was Nicanor slayne, and from that tyme forth the Iewes had the cite in possession: And here wil I now make an ende.

All the generacions from Abrahā to Dauid are fourtene generacions: From Dauid vnto the captiuite of Babylon, are fourtene generacions. From the captiuite of Babylon rnto Christ, are also fourtene generacions.

The byrth of Christ was on thys wyse: ${ }^{5}$ When his mother Mary was maried to Ioseph * before they came together, she was foude with chylde by y holy goost. But loseph her huszbande was a perfect man, and wolde not bringe her to shame, but was mynded to put her awaie secretely. Nenertheles whyle he thus thought, beholde, the angell of the LORDE appered vato him in a dreame, saynge: Ioseph thou sonne of Dauid, feare not to take vnto the Mary thy wyfe. For that which is cōceaued in her, is of y holy goost. She shall brynge forth a sonne, and thou shalt call his name Iesus.' For he shall saue his people from their synnes.

All this was done, $\frac{t}{y}$ the thinge might, be fulfilled, which was spoken of the LORDE by the Prophet, saynge: ${ }^{*}$ Beholde, a mayde shall be with chylde, and shall brynge forth a ${ }^{2}$ WHIEN lens was bome at Bethleé in lury, in the trme of Herode the kynge, Beholde, there came wse men from the east to lerusale, saynge: Where is the new borne kynge of the lues? We haue seme his stame in the east, and are come to worship him.

When Iterode if kynge had herde thys, he was troublech, $\tau$ all Ierusate with hym, and he gathered all the hye l'restes and Scribes of $\dot{y}$ people, and axed of them, where Christ shulde be bornc. And they sayde rnto hym: at Bethleem in Iury. For thus it is written by the Prophet: ${ }^{b}$ And thou Bethleem in the londe of Iury, art not the leest amonge the Prinees of liuda. 'For out of $\hat{y}$ shall come vnto me the captayne, that shall gouerne my people Israel. and dyligently enquyred of them, what tyme the starre appered, and sent them to Bethleem, sainge: Go, and searche dyligently for the chylde. And when ye haue founde hym, bringe me worde agayne, that I maye come and worshippe hym also.

When they had heard the kynge, they departed: and lo, the starre which they sawe in the east, went before them, tyll it eame, and stode ouer the place where the chylde was. When they sawe the starre, they were maruelously glad: and went into the house, and found the chylde with Mary his mother, and kneled downe and worshipped hym, ${ }^{d}$ opened ther treasures, and offred vnto hym gyftes: gold, franckynsence and myrre. And after they were warned of God in a dreame, that they shuld not go ageine to Herod, they returned into their awne countre another waye.
$\mathcal{C}$ When they were departed: beholde, the angell of the LORDE appered to Ioseph in a dreane, sayinge: arsse, and take the chylde land his mother, and flye into Egypte, ${ }^{e}$ and abyde there tyll I bryige the worde. For Herod wyl seke the chylde to destroye hym. The he arose, and toke the ehylde and his mother by night, and departed into Egypte, and was there nito $y$ deeth of Herod, that the thinge might be fulfylled which was spoke of the LORDE, by the Prophet, which sayeth: ${ }^{f}$ out of Egypte haue I called my sonne.

Then Herod perceauynge $\dot{y}$ he was disceaued of the wyse men, was excedynge wroth, and sent forth, and slue all the ehyldren that were in Bethleem, and in all the coastes there of, as many as were two yere olde and mader, accordynge to the tyme which he had diligently searched out of the wyse men.

Then was $\dot{y}$ fulfilled which was spoken by ẙ Prophet Ieremy sayinge $:^{g}$ On ${ }^{\circ}$ hilles was a voyce herde, greate mournynge, wepynge, t lamentacion: Rachel wepynge for her chỵldren, and wolde not be conforted, because they were not.

When Herode was deed: beholde, an angell of the LORDE appered in a dreame to Ioseph in Egypte, sayinge: arise and take the chylde and his mother, and go in to $\mathrm{y}^{\circ}$ londe of Isracl. For they are deed, which sought the chyldes life. And he arose vp , and toke y chylde and his mother, a came into the londe of Israel. But whe he herde that Archelaus did raygne in Lury, in y rowme of his father Herode, he was afrayde to go thither. Notwithstondinge after he was warned of God in a dreame, he turned asyde into the parties of Galile, and went and dwelt in a cite called Nazareth, ${ }^{h}$ to fulfill $\frac{t}{y}$ which was spoken by the Prophetes: he shalbe called a Nazarite.

The iij. Chapter.

IN those dayes Ihon the Baptyst came and preaehed in the wildernes of lury, saynge: Amēde youre selues, the kyngdome of heuen is at honde.' 'This is he, of whom it is spoke by $\hat{y}$ Prophet Esay, which sayeth: The voyce of a eryer in $\dot{y}$ wyldernes, prepare the LORDES waye, and make his pathes straight.

This Ihon had his garment of camels heer, and a lethre gerdell aboute his loynes. ${ }^{*}$ Hys meate was locustes and wylde hony. Then went out to hym lerusalem, and all lury, and [^966]all the region roumde aboute Iordan, and were baptised of him in Iordan, cōfessynge their symnes.

${ }^{a}$ Now when he sawe many of the Pharises and of $y$ Saduces come to hys baptim, he sayde vnto them: ye generaciō of vipers, who hath certified you, that ye shal escape $\hat{y}$ vengeaunce to come? Bewarre, brynge forth due frutes of pennaunce. Thinke not now, to saye in your selues, we haue Abraham to oure father. For I saye vnto you, that God is able of these stones to rayse vp chyldren vnto Abraham. Euen now is the axe put vnto $\hat{y}$ rote of the trees: therfore ${ }^{b}$ euery tre which bringeth not forth good frute, shalbe hewe downe, and cast into the fyre.

I baptise you with water to repentaunce: but he that cometh after me, is myghtier the $\mathrm{I},{ }^{c}$ whose shues I am not worthy to beare. He shall baptise you with y holy goost $\pi$ with fyre: which hath also his fan in his hond, and will pourge his floore, and gadre the wheet into his garner, a will burne y chaffe with vnquencheable fyre. ${ }^{d}$

Then came Iesus from Galile to Iordan, ${ }^{e}$ vnto Ihon, to be baptised of hym. But Ihō forbade hym, saynge: I haue nede to be baptysed of the: and commest thou to me? Iesus answered a sayd vato hym: Let it be so now. For thus it be commeth vs to fulfyll all righteousnes. Then he suffred hym. ${ }^{f}$ And Iesus assone as be was baptised, came straight out of the water. And lo, heue was ope ouer hym: and Ihon sawe the spirite of God descende lyke a doue, and lyght ppon hym. And lo , there came a voyce frō heuē sayng: ${ }^{8}$ Thys ys that my beloued sonne, in whom is my delyte.

Cye iiij. Chapter.

THEN was Iesus ledd awaye of the spirite in to wildernes, to be tempted of the deuyll. And when he had fasted fourtye dayes and fourtye nightes, he was afterward an hungred. "And the tepter came to him and sayde: yf thou be the sonne of God, commannde, that these stones be made breed. He answered a sayde: yt is wryttè: 'Man shall not lyue by bred onlye, but by euery worde that proceadeth out of the mouth of God.

Then the deuyll toke hym rp into the holy cite, and set hym on a pynacle of the temple, and sayde vnto hym: yf thou be $y$ sonne of God, cast thy sylfe downe. ${ }^{\text {k }}$ For it is wrytten: he shall geue his angels charge ouer the and with their handes they shal holde the vp, that thou dashe not thy fote agaynst a stone. And Iesus sayde vnto hym: it ys wrytten also: 'Thou shalt not tempte thy LORDE God.

Agayne, the deuyll toke hym vp and led hym in to an excedynge hye mountayne, and shewed hym all the kyngdomes of the worlde, and all the glorie of them, and sayde vnto hym: all these wil I geue the, yf thou wilt fall downe and worship me. ${ }^{m}$ Then sayde Iesus vnto hym: Auoyde Satā. For it ys wrytte: thou shalt worshyp the LORDE thy God and hym onely shalt thou serue.

Then the deuell left hym, and beholde, the angels came and ministred unto hym.
"When lesus had herde that Ihon was taken, he departed into Galile and left Nazareth, and went and dwelt in Capernaum, which is a cite apon the see, in the coostes of zabulon and Neptatim, $\dot{y}^{t}$ the thinge might be fulfilled whiche was spoken by Esay the Prophet, sayinge: ${ }^{\circ}$ The londe of zabulon and Neptalim, the waye of the sce beyonde Iordan, and Galile of the Gentyls, the people which sat in darknes, sawe a greate lyght, © to them which sat in the region a shadowe of deeth, lyght is begone to shyne.

From that tyme forth beganne Iesus to preach, and to saye: Amende youre selues, y kingdome of heauen is at honde.

As Iesus walked by the sce of Galile, he $\mathbb{C}$ sawe two brethren: Simon which was called Peter, © Andrew his brother, castynge a net into y see, for they were fiszhers, and he sayde vnto them: folowe me, a I will make you fiszhers of me $\bar{c}^{p}$ And they strayght waye lefte their nettes, and folowed hym.

And whan he wet forth from thence, he sawe other two brethren, Iames the sonne of zebede, and Ihon his brother, in the ship with zebede their father, mendynge their nettes, and called them. ${ }^{9}$ And they without tarynge lefte $\dot{y}$ shyp and their father, and folowed hym.

And Iesus went aboute all Galile, ${ }^{T}$ teachyng in their synagoges, and preachynge the gospel

[^967]Fof the kyngtome, and heated all maner of siknes, is all maner dyseases amonge the prople. And his fime spred abrole through out all siria. And they bronght vato hym all sick people, that were taken with diners diseases and gripinges, and the $\frac{*}{y}$ were possessed with denils, a those which were lunatye, and those that had the palsie: a he heated the. And ther folowed hyon a greate nembre of people, from Gatile, a from the ten cities," and from Ierusalem, and from the regions that lye beyonde Iordan.

(b) $\mathfrak{b}$. (T)apter.

a WIIEN he sawe the people, he went vp into a monntayme: and when he was set, his disciples came to hym, and he opened his mouth, and taught them, sayinge: ${ }^{b}$ Blessed are the poore in sprete: for theirs is the kyagdone of heue. Blessed are they that monne: for they shalbe eoforted. ${ }^{c}$ Blessed are the moke: for they shall inheret the erth. ${ }^{d}$ Blessed are they which honger a thyrst for rightewesnes: for they shalbe filled. [^968]Thinke not, that I am come to destroye the lawe, or the Prophetes:i no, I am not come to destroye them, but to fulfyll them. For truly I saye vnto you: till heauen and earth. periszhe, one iott or one tyttle of the lawe shall not escape, tyll all be fulfilled.
${ }^{k}$ Whosoeuer breaketh one of these least comanndmentes, and teacheth mē so, he shalbe called the leest in the kyngdome of heauen. But whosoeuer obserueth and teacheth the same shalbe called greate in the kyngdome of heaven.

For I saye vnto you: excepte youre rightewesnes exceade the rightewesnes of the Seribes and Pharises, ye can not entre in to the kyngdome of heauen.

AT the same tyme wēte lesus thorow the corne vpon the Sabbath,' and his disciples were hongrie, and beganne to plucke of the eares of the corne, and to eate. When $\dot{y}$ Pharises sawe that, they sayde vito him: Beholde, thy disciples do that, which is not laufull to do vpon the Sabbath. He sayde vnto them: baue ye not red what Dauid did, whan he was hongrie, a they also $\frac{t}{y}$ were with him? How he entred in to the house of God, ( ${ }^{k}$ ate the shew breds which were not laufull for him to eate, nether for the ${ }^{\frac{t}{y}}$ were with him, but onely for the prestes? Or have ye not red in the lawe how that the prestes in the temple breake the Sabbath, and yet are blamelesse? But 1 saye vnto you: $\mathrm{t}^{\mathrm{y}}$ here is one greater then the temple. 'But yf ye wyst what this were (I haue pleasure in mercy, and not in offeringe) ye wolde not haue condemned innocentes: For the sonne of man is LORDE euen ouer the Sabbath.

'But whan the Pharises herde that, they sayde: He drymeth the tleuyls out none other wyse, but thorow Beelzebub the chefe of the deuyls. Netertheles lesus knew their thoughtes, and sayde ruto them: Euery kyngdome deuyded within it self, shalbe desolate: and euery cite or house deuyded in it self, maye not contymue. So yf one Sathan east out another, the is he at variaunce within him self: how maye then his kyngdome endure? But yf I cast out deuils thorow Beelzebub, thorow whom do youre childrē east them out? Therfore shal they be youre iudges. But yf 1 cast out the deuyls by the sprete of God then is the kyngdome of God come vpon you. Or how cī a man entre in to a stronge mans homse, dand violently take awaye his goodes, excepte he first bynde the stronge mā, the $\bar{e}$ spoyle his house? ${ }^{\text {a }}$ THE same daye wente lesus out of $\dot{y}$ house, ${ }^{b}$ and sat by the see syde, a moch people resorted vnto him: so $\frac{t}{y}$ he wēte in to a shyppe and satt him downe, and all the people stode vpō the shore. And he spake many thinges vito the in symilitudes, sayenge: Beholde, The sower wente forth to sowe: and as he sowed, some fell by the waye syde: Then came the foules, a ate it vp. Some fell vpon stony grounde, at anone it spronge $v_{p}$, because it had no depth of earth: But whan the Sonne arose, it caught heate: and for so moch as it had no rote, it withred awaye. Some fell amoge the thomes, at the thornes grewe vp, and choked it. Some fell vpō good groūde, ז gaue frute : some an hundreth folde, some sixtie folde, some thirtie folde. Who so hath eares to heare, let hi heare.
And the disciples came vnto him, and sayde: ${ }^{\text {c }}$ Why speakest thou to the by parables? But blessed are youre eyes, for they se: a C youre eares, for they heare. Verely I saye vito you: ${ }^{f}$ Many prophetes a righteous men haue desyred to se $\hat{y}$ thinges that ye se, and haue not sene the: and to heare the thinges that ye heare, and haue not herde thē. "Whan one heareth $\frac{8}{y}$ worde of the kyngdome, and inderstondeth it not, the euell man cometh, and plucketh it awaye that is sowne in his hert: © this is he $\frac{t^{*}}{}$ is sowne by the waye syde. But he $\frac{\mathfrak{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ is sowne in the stonye grounde, is this: whā one heareth the worde, $\pi$ anone with ioye receaueth it: neuertheles he hath no rote i him, but endureth for a season: what trouble a persecucion aryseth because of the worde, immediatly he his offended. As for hin that is sowne amonge y thornes, this is he: What one heareth the worde, $\tau$ the carefulnes of this worlde, $\mathbb{I}$ the disceatfulnes of riches choke the worde, a so he becometh vnfrutefull. But he $\mathrm{y}^{\mathrm{t}}$ is sowne in the good grounde, is this: whan one heareth the worde, and vnderstondeth it, and bringeth forth frute: and some geueth an hīdreth folde, some sistie folde, and some thirtie folde.

Another parable put he forth mnto the, ъ sayde: The kyngdome of heaue is like vnto a man, ${ }^{4} \frac{t}{y}$ sowed good sede in his felde. But whyle mé slepte, there came an enemye, and sowed tares amonge $\dot{y}$ wheate, a wente his waye. If Agayne, the kingdome of heauen is like moto a treasure hyd in the felde, which a maa founde and hid it, and for ioye therof he wēte a solde all $\stackrel{t}{y}$ he had, and bought $\frac{t}{y}$ felde.

Agayne, the kyngdome of heauen is like vnto a marehañt, $\dot{y}$ sought good pearles: a whà he had founde a precious pearle, ${ }^{8}$ he wēte and solde all that he had, a bought it.

Agayne, ẙ kyngdome of heaue is like vnto a nett cast in to y see, wherwith are take all maner of fyshes: a whā it is ful, mé drawe it out vnto $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ shore, © sytt © gather $\mathfrak{y}$ good i to

But whé the huszbandme sawe the sonne, they sayde amonge the selues: This is the Heyre, come, let us kyl hym, ${ }^{e}$ and take his inheritauce vnto oure selues. And they caught him, and thrust him out of the vynyarde, a slew him. Now whe the lorde of the vynyarde commeth, what wyl he do with those huszbandmen? They sayde mnto him: He wyl cruelly destroye those euell personnes, a let out his vyniarde vnto other huszbädmen, which shal delyuer him the frute at tymes conuenyent.
lesus sayde vnto the: Dyd ye neuer rede in the seriptures: The same stone which the buylders refused, ${ }^{f}$ is become the heade stone in the comer? This was the LORDES doynge, $\pi$ it is maruelous $\mathbf{i}$ oure eyes. Therfore I saie mito you: The kingdome of God shalbe take frō you, a shalbe geue rnto the Heithe, which shal brynge forth y frutes of it. And who so falleth vpō this stone, shalbe brokē in peces: ${ }^{5}$ © loke rō whom it falleth, it shal grynde him to poulder. ${ }^{.}$And when the hye prestes a Pharises herde his parables, they perceaued, that he spake of them.' And they wente aboute to take him, but they feared ẙ people, because ${ }^{k}$ they helde hī for a prophet.

1ND Iesus answered, and spake mito the agayne by parables, a sayde: The kingdome of heauen is like vnto a kynge, ${ }^{\text {b }}$ which maried his sonne. And sent forth his seruauntes, to ${ }^{m}$ call the gestes onto the mariage, a they wolde not come. Agayne, he sent forth other seruauntes, and sayde: Tell the gestes: Beholde, I haue prepared my dynner, myne oxen and my fed catell are kylled, and all thinges are readye, come to the mariage. But they made light of it, and wente their wayes: one to his huszbandrye, another to his marchaundise. As for the remnaūt, they toke his seruauntes, and intreated the shamefully, and slew thē. When the kynge herde that, he was wroth, and sent forth his warryers, and destroyed those murtherers, and set fyre rpon their cite. Then sayde he vnto his sernauntes: The mariage in dede is

[^993]prepared, but the gestes were not worthy. Go youre waye out therfore in to $\dot{y}$ hye wayes, and as many as ye fynde, byd them to the mariage. And the seruauntes wēte ont in to the hye wayes, and gathered together as many as they coulde fynde, both good and bad, a the tables were all full. Then the kynge x wète in, to se the gestes, and spyed there a man that had not on a weddynge garment, and sayde vnto him: Frende, how camest thou in hither, a hast not on a weddyinge garment? And he was euen spechlesse. 'Then sayde the kynge vnto his seruauntes: ${ }^{0}$ Take and bynde him bande and fote, a cast him into $\hat{y}$ vtter darcknes: there shal be waylinge and gnaszhinge of teth. For many be called, but few are chose. ${ }^{b}$

Then wente the Pharises, and toke councell, how they might tangle him in his wordes, and ${ }^{\text {c }}$ sent vnto him their disciples with Herodes officers, and sayde: Master, we knowe that thou art true, and teachest the waye of God truly, and carest for no mā: for thou regardest not the outwarde appearaunce of me. Tell us therfore, how thinkest thou? Is it laufull to geue tribute rnto the Emperoure, or not? Now whā Iesus perceaued their wickednes, he sayde: O ye ypocrites, why tēpte ye me? Shewe me y tribute money. And they toke $\mathbb{C}$ hĩ a peny. And he saide vnto thē: Whose is this ymage and superscription? They sayde vnto him: The Emperours. Then sayde he vnto them: ${ }^{d}$ Geue therfore vnto the Emperour, that which is the Emperours: and geue vnto God, that which is Gods. When they herde that, they marueyled, and left him, $\checkmark$ wēte their waye.

The same daye there came vnto him the Saduces ${ }^{e}$ (which holde that there is no resurreccion) and axed him, and sayde: Master, Moses sayde: 'If a man dye, hanynge no children, his brother shal mary his wife, a rayse vp sede vnto his brother. Now were there with us seuē brethren. The first maried a wife, and dyed: $\pi$ for somoch as he had no sede, he left his wife vnto his brother. Like wyse the seeōde, and thirde minto the senēth. Last of all the woman dyed also. Now in the resurreccion, whose wife shal she be of the [^994]seuen? For they all had her. Iesus answered, and sayde vnto them: Ye erre, and inderstöde not the scriptures, ner the power of God. In the resurreccion they shal nether mary, ner be maried, but are as the angels of God in heauen.

As touchinge the resurreccio of the deed. ${ }^{2}$ haue je not red, what is spoken mnto you of God, which sayeth: I am the God of Abraham, and $\hat{y}$ God of Isaac, and the God of Iacob?: Yet is not God a God of the deed, but of the lyuynge. And whan the people herde that, they were astonnyed at his doctryne.

When the Pharises herde, ${ }^{\text {, }}$ that he had stopped the mouth of the Saduces, they gathered them selues together. And one of them (a Scrybe) tēpted him, and sayde: Master, which is the chefest commaundemèt in the lawe? Iesus saide vnto him: Thou shalt loue the LORDE thy God with all thy hert, ${ }^{\text {, }}$ with all thy soule, and with all thy mynde: this is the pryncipall and greatest comaundement. As for the seconde, it is like mnto it: "Thou shalt loue thy neghboure as thy self. In these two commaundementes hange all the lawe and the prophetes.

Now whyle the Pharises were gathered together, ${ }^{b}$ Iesus axed them, and sayde: What thinke ye of Christ? Whose sonne is he? They sayde unto him: Dauids. He sayde vnto them: How then doth Dauid in sprete, call him LORDE, sayenge: The LORDE sayde rnto my LORDE: ${ }^{m}$ Syt thou on my right honde, tyll I make thine enemies thy fote stole. If Dauid now call him LORDE, how is he then his sonne? And no man coude answere him one worde, nether durst eny man axe him eny mo questiōs, frō that daye forth.

Cfe miil. Chapter.

THEN spake Iesus moto $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ people and to $\mathfrak{G}$ his disciples, and sayde: The scrybes a Pharises are set dorne rpon Moses seate. A 1 ND Iesus wente out and departed from the temple, ${ }^{d}$ and his disciples came vito him, to shew him the buyldinge of the temple. But Iesus sayde vnto them: Se ye not all these thinges? Verely I saye vnto you: ${ }^{\circ}$ there shal not be left here one stone vpon another, $\stackrel{t}{\mathrm{y}}$ shal not be cast downe. And as he sat vpon the mount Oliuete, his disciples came vnto him secretly, © saide: Tell us, whè shal these thinges come to passe? and which shal be the token of thy comynge, and of the ende of the worlde? Iesus answered and sayde mnto them: Take hede, that no man disceaue you. for there shal many come in my name, and saye: I am Christ, and shal disceaue many.

Ye shal heare of warres, and of $\dot{y}$ noyse of warres: take hede, and be not ye troubled. All these thinges must first come to passe, but the ende is not yet. For one people shall ryse vp agaynst another, ${ }^{5}$ and one realme agaynst another: and there shalbe pestilēce, honger, and earthquakes here a there. All these are the begynnynge of sorowes.
"Then shal they put you to trouble, a shal kyll you, and ye shalbe hated of all people for my names sake. The shal many be offended, and shal betraye one another, and shal hate one the other. And many false prophetes shal aryse, and shal disceaue many: and 'because iniquyte shal haue the vpper hande, the loue of many shal abate. But whoso endureth vnto $\dot{y}$ ende, ${ }^{k} \dot{f}$ same shal be saued. And this gospell of the kyngdome shalbe preached in all the worlde for a wytnes vnto all people, ${ }^{,}$and then shal the ende come.

Whan ye therfore shal se the abhominacion of desolacion ${ }^{m}$ (wher of it is spokē by Daniel the prophet) stonde in the holy place (who so readeth it, let him marck it well) the let the [^997]which be in lewry, flye vito y moūtaynes: and let him which is on the house toppe, not come downe to fet eny thinge out of his house: and let him which is in $\dot{y}$ felde, not turne back to fetch his clothes. But wo vuto them that are with childe, and to them that geue suck in those dayes. But praye ye, that youre flight be not in $\frac{8}{y}$ wynter, ner on the Sabbath. ${ }^{n}$ For then shal there be greate trouble, soch as was not from the begynnynge of the worlde vito this tyme, ner shalbe. Yee and excepte those daies shulde be shortened, there shulde no flesh be saued: but for $\dot{y}$ chosens sake those dayes shalbe shortened.

${ }^{\text {o T Then yf eny man shal saye vnto you: lo, }}$ here is Christ, or there, beleue it not. For there shal aryse false Christes and false prophetes, ${ }^{p}$ and shal do greate tokēs and wonders: In so moch, that (yf it were possible) the very chosen shulde be brought in to erroure. Beholde, I have tolde you before. Wherfore yf they shal saye vnto you: Beholde, he is in the wildernes, go not ye forth: Beholde, he is in the chamber, beleue it not. For like as the lightenynge goeth out from the East, and shyneth vnto the west, so shal the commynge of the sonne of man be. For where so euer a deed carcase is, ${ }^{9}$ there wyl the Aegles be gathered together.
'Immediatly after the trouble of the same tyme, shal the Sonne and Moone lose their light, and the starres shall fall from heauen, and the powers of heauen shal moue: and then shal appeare the token of the sonne of man in heaué: and then shal all the kynreds of the earth mourne, and they shal se the sonne of man 'come in the cloudes of heanen with greate power and glory. And he shal sende his angels with y greate voyce of a trompe, ${ }^{\text {' }}$ a they shal gather together his chosen from the foure wyndes, from one ende of the heauen to the other.

So likewyse ye, whan ye se all these thynges, be ye sure, that it is nye euen at the dores. Verely I saye vnto you: This generacion shal not passe, tyll all these be fulfylled. Heauen and earth shal perishe, but my wordes shal not [^998]perishe. ${ }^{9}$ Neuertheles of that daye $\pi$ houre knoweth no man, no not the angels of heauen, D but my father onely. Euen as it was in the tyme of Noe, so shal the commynge of the some of man be also. ${ }^{6}$ For as they were in the dayes before $\dot{y}$ floude (they ate, they dronke, they maried, and were maried, enen vnto the daye $\dot{y}$ Noe entred in to the shippe, and they regarded it not, tyll the floude eame and toke them all awaye) So shal also the commynge of the sonne of man be. Thē shal two be in the felde: ${ }^{\text {c }}$ the one shal be receaued, and the other shalbe refused: Two shal be gryndinge at the Myll, the one shalbe receaued, and the other shalbe refused: (Two in the bed, the one shalbe receaued, and the other refused.)

${ }^{d}$ Watch therfore, for ye knowe not what houre youre LORDE wil come. But be sure of this, that yf the good man of the house knewe what 'houre the thefe wolde come, he wolde surely watel, and not suffre his house to be broken vp . Therfore be ye ready also, for in the houre that ye thynke not, shal the some of man come. Who is now a faithfull and wyse seruaūt, whom his lorde hath made ruler ouer his houszholde, that he maye geue them meate in due season? ${ }^{5}$ Blessed is $\dot{y}$ seruaūt, whom his lorde (whan he cōmeth) shal fyude so doynge. Verely. I saye vuto you: he shal set him ouer all his goodes. But and yf the euell seruaut shal saye in his hert: Tush, it wil be longe or my lorde come, and begyme to smyte his felowes, yee and to eate and drynke with the dronken: The same seruaütes lorde shal come in a daye, whá he loketh not for him, and in an houre that he is not ware of, and shal hew him in peees and geue him his rewarde with ypoerytes: there shal be waylinge and gnaszhinge of teth.

Ebe rrb. Clapter.

TIIEN shal the kyngdome of heauen be like vuto ten virgins, which toke their laipes, and wente forth to mete the brydegrome. But fyue of them were foolish, and fyue were "yse. The foolish toke their lapes, nenertheles they toke none oyle with them. But the wyse toke oyle in their vessels with their tampes. Now whyle the brydegrome taried, [^999]they slombred all and slepte. But at mydnight there was a erye made: Beholde, the brydegrome commeth, go youre waye out for to mete him. Then all those virgins arose, and prepared their lampes. But the foolish sayde vito the wyse: geue vs of youre oyle, for oure lāpes are gone out. Then answered the wyse, and sayde: Not so, lest there be not ynough for vs and you, but go rather vito then that sell, and bye for youre selues. And whyle they wente to bye, the brydegrome came: and they that were readye, wente in with him vnto the mariage, and the gate was shut vp . At $\mathfrak{y}$ last came $\dot{y}$ other virgins also, and sayde: ${ }^{\text {LLORDE }}$ LORDE LORDE, opē vnto vs. But he answered, and sayde: Verely I saye vnto you: I knowe you not. 'Wateh ye therfore, for ye knowe nether the daye ner yet the houre, whan $\dot{y}$ some of man shal come.

Like wyse as a certayne mā ready to take his iourney in to a straunge countre, ${ }^{k}$ called his seruaūtes, and delyuered his goodes vnto thē. And vnto one he gaue fyue talentes, to another two, and to another one: winto euery man after his abilyte, and straight waye departed. Then be that had receaued the fyue talentes, wente and occupied with the same, and wanne other fyue talentes. Likewyse be $\frac{t}{y}$ receaued two talentes, wāne other two also. But he that receaued $\dot{y}$ one wente and dygged a pyt in the earth, and hyd his lordes money. After a longe season the lorde of those seruauntes came, and rekened with them. Then eame he that bad receaued fyue talentes, and brought other fyue talentes, and sayde: Syr, thou delyuerdst unto me fyue talentes: Beholde, with them haue I wonne fyue talētes mo. Then sayde his lorde vnto hī: wel thou good $\tau$ faithfull seruaunt, thou bast bene faithfull ouer litle, I wil set the ouer moeh: entre thou in to the ioye of thy lorde. Thē eame he also that had receaued two talentes, and sayde: Syr, thou delyuerdst wnto me two talentes: Beholde, I haue wonne two other talētes with thé. His lorde sayde vnto him: Wel thou good and faithfull seruaūt, thou hast bene laithfull ouer litle, I wil set the ouer moch : entre thou in to the ioye of thy lorde.
Then he that had receaued the one talēt, came and sayde: Syr, I knew that thou art [^1000]an hard man: thou reapest where thou hast not sowen, and gatherest where thou hast not strowed, and so I was afrayed, and wēte and hyd thy talent in the earth: lo, there thou hast thine owne. But his lorde answered, and sayde rnto him: Thon euell and slouthful! seruaunt, knewest thou that I reape where I sowed not, and gather where I strawed not? Thou shuldest therfore haue had my money to the chaungers, and then at my comnynge shulde I haue receaued myne owne with vauntage. Therfore take the talent frō him, and geue it vato him that hath ten talentes. ${ }^{a}$ For who so hath, to him shalbe geuen, and he shal haue abundaunce. But who so hath not, frō him shalbe take awaye euen that he hath. And cast the vnprofitable seruaunt in to vtter darcknes: ${ }^{b}$ there shalbe waylinge and gnaszhinge of teth.

${ }^{\text {c }}$ But whan the sonne of man shal come in his glory, and all holy angels with him, then shal he syt vpon the seate of his glory. And all people shalbe gathered before him: and he shal separate them one from another ${ }^{d}$ as a shepherde deuydeth the shepe from $\dot{y}$ goates. And he shal set $\frac{8}{y}$ shepe on his right honde, and the goates on the lefte. Then shal the kynge saye vnto them that shalbe on his right honde: Come hither ye blessed of my father, inheret ye $\mathfrak{y}$ kingdome, ${ }^{e}$ which is prepared for you from the begynnynge of the worlde. For I was hongrie, and ye gaue me meate: I was thirstie, and ye gaue me drynke:' I was harbourlesse, and ye lodged me: I was naked, a ye clothed me: I was sicke, and ye vysited me: ${ }^{8}$ I was in preson, and ye came vnto me.

Then shal the righteous answere him, a saye: LORDE, whe sawe we the hoggrie, and fed the? Or thirstie, and gaue the drynke? When sawe we the herbourlesse, and lodged the? Or naked, and clothed $y$ ? Or whe sawe we $y$ sicke or in preson, and came vnto the? And the kynge shal answer and saye vnto them: Verely I saye vito you: Loke what ye haue done unto one of the least of these my brethren, the same haue ye done vinto me.

Then shal he saye also vinto them that shalbe on the left hande: ${ }^{4}$ Departe fro me ye cursed in to the euerlastinge fyre, which is [^1001]prepared for the deuell and his angels. For I| was hōgrie, and ye gane me no meate: I was thirstye, and ye gaue me no drynke: I was herbourlesse, and ye lodged me not: I was naked, and ye clothed me not: I was sicke and in preson, and ye rysited me not.

Then shal they also answere $h \overline{1}$, and saye : LORDE, when sawe we the hogrie, or thyrstie, or herbourlesse, or naked, or sieke, or in preson, and have not mynistred wnto the? 'The shal he answere them, and saye: Verely I saye vnto you:' Loke what ye haue not done vnto one of the leest of these, the same haue ye not done vuto me. And these shal go in to euerlastinge payne, but the righteous in to euerlastinge life.

The mpic. Chapter.

AND it came to passe whā Iesus had 图 fynished all these wordes, he sayde vnto his diseiples: Ye knowe, that after two dayes shalbe Easter, and the somne of man shalbe delyuered to be crucified. ${ }^{*}$

Then 'assembled together the hye prestes and the scrybes, and the elders of the people in to the palace of the hye prest which was called Caiphas, and helde a councell, how they might take Iesus by disceate, and kyll him. But they sayde: Not on the holy daye, lest there be an vproure in the people.

Now when lesus was at Bethany ${ }^{m}$ in the house of Symon the leper, there came vnto hi a woman, which had * a boxe with precious oyntment, and poured it vpon his heade, as he sat at the table. Whan his disciples sawe that, they diszdayned, and sayde: Where to serueth this waist? This oyntmēt might have bene wel solde, and geué to the poore. Whe lesus perceaued that, he sayde moto them: Why trouble ye the woman? She hath wrought a good worke vpon me for ye haue allwaye the poore with yon," but me shal ye not haue allwayes. Where as she hath poured this oyntmēt vpon my body, she dyd it to bury me. Verely I saye vato you: where so euer this gospell shalbe preached thorow out all the worlde, there shal this also that she hath done, be tolde for a memoriall of her.

[^1002] sayde: ${ }^{\circ}$ What wil ye geue me, and I shal debuner him vuto you? Ind they offered his thirties syluer pers. Sud from that tyme forth, he sought oportunyte to betraye hims.

The first daye of swete bred came the disciphes to lesus, ${ }^{\circ}$ and sayde vito him: Where witt thon that we prepare for the, to eate the laster lambe? Ile sayde: (ro in to the cite to soch a man, and saye vato him: The Master semdeth the worke: My tyme is at honde, I wil kepe myne Easter by the with my diseiples. And the disciples dyd as lesus had appoynted them, and made ready the Vanter lambe.

And at euen he sat downe at the table with the twohe. And as they ate, he sayde: Verely 1 saye vnto you: One of you shal betrave me. And they were exceadinge soroufull, and beganne enery one of them to saye tuto him: Syr, is it l? He answered and sayde: He that deppeth his honde with me in the dyszhe, the same shal betraye me. The some of man goeth forth, as it is wrytten of him: but wo vnto that man by who the some of man shalbe betrayed: It had bene better for that $m \bar{a}$, yf he had neuer bene borne. The Iudas that betrayed him, answered and saycle: Master, is it I? He sayde vnto him: Thom hast sayde.
And as they ate, Iesus toke the bred, gave thankes, ${ }^{d}$ brake it, and gane it to the disciples, and sayde: Take, eate, this is my body. And he toke the cuppe, and thanked, and gaue it the, and sayde: Drynke ye atl therof, this is my bloude of the new testament, that shalbe shed for many for the remission of symnes. I saye vnto you: I wil not drynke hence forth of this frute of the vyne tre, vontll that daye that 1 shal drynke it new with you in my fathers kyngdome.

And whan they had sayde grace, ${ }^{\text {e }}$ they wente forth vonto mome Olinete. 'Then sayde lesus vnto them.* This night shat ye all be offended in me. For it is wrytten: I wil smyte the shepherde, and the shepe of the flocke shalbe scatered abrode. But after that I ryse agayne, 'I wil gr hefore you in to Gahile. Peter answered and sayde quto him: though all [^1003]men shulde be offended in $\dot{y}$, yet wyl I neuer be offeded. Iesus sayde vnto hi: Verely I saye vnto $\dot{y}$ : This same night before $\dot{y}$ cock crowe, shalt thon denie me thryse. Peter saide vnto him: And though I shulde dye with the, yet wil I not denye the. Likewyse also sayde all the disciples.

Then cane Iesus with them in to a felde whieh is called ${ }^{g}$ Gethsemane, and sayde vnto the disciples: Syt ye here, whyle I go yonder t praye. And he toke with him Peter, and the two sonnes of Zebede, and beganne to wexe soroufull and to be in an agonye. Then sayde Iesus vnto them: "My soule is heuy euen vnto the death. Tary ye here, and watch with me. 'And he wente forth a litle, and fell flat vpon his face, and prayed sayenge: O my father, yf it be possible, let this cuppe passe fro me: neuertheles not as I wil but as thou wilt. And he came to his disciples, and founde thē a slepe, $\pi$ sayde vnto Peter: What? coude ye not watch with me one houre? And he eame, and founde them a slepe agayne, and their eyes were heuy. And he left them, and wente forth agayne, and prayed the thirde tyme, sayenge the same wordes. Then came he to his disciples, and sayde vnto them: Slepe on now, and take youre rest. Beholde, the houre is come, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ the sonne of man shalbe delyuered in to the hondes of synners: Aryse, let us be goynge. Beholde, he is at hṑde, that betrayeth me.

Whyle he yet spake, lo, Iudas one of the twolue came, "and with him a greate multitude with swerdes and staues, sent fro the hye prestes and elders of the people. And he that betrayed him, had geuen them a toke, sayenge : Whom so euer I kysse, that same is he, laye hiodes ypo him. And forth withal he came to lesus, and sajde: Hayle master, and kyssed him. And Iesus sayde vnto him: Frende, wherfore art thou come? Then came they, and layed hondes rpon Iesus, and toke

VPON the morow，all the hye prestes and elders of the people helde a coun－ cell agaynst Iesus，${ }^{\circ}$ that they might put him to death，and bounde him，and led him forth， and delyuered him vnto ${ }^{p}$ Poutius Pilate the debyte．

When Iudas which betrayed him，sawe this that he was condemned unto death，it repented him，and brought agayne the thirtie syluer pens to the hye prestes and the elders， and sayde：I haue done euell，in that I hane betrayed innocēt bloude．They sayde：What haue we to do with ${ }^{\ddagger}$ ？Se thou therto． And he cast the syluer pens in the teple，and ${ }^{2}$ gat him awaye，and wente and hanged him self．

So the hye prestes toke the syluer pens， and sayde：It is not laufull to put them in to the Gods chest，for it is bloudmoney．Nener－ theles they helde a councell，and bought with

As for lesus，he stode before the debyte， and the debyte axed him，and sayde：＂Art thou the kyige of the lewes？Ind Iesus sayde suto him：Thou sayest it．Aud what he wats accused of the hye prestes and elders， ho answered nothinge．Then sayde Pylate vito him：Hearest thou not，how sore they accuse the？Aud＊he answered him not one worde：in so moch that the debyte marueled execeadingly．

At that feast，the debyte was wōte to delyuer a presoner fre monto the people，whom they wolle．And at the same tyme he had a notahle presoner ealled Barrabas．And whan they were gathered together，Pylate sayde snto them：Whether wil ye，that I geue lowse into you？Barrabas，or lesus which is called Christ？For he knewe well that they had delyuered him of enuye．And whà he sat yois the iudgmèt seate，his wife sent vnto him， sayenge：Haue thou notlinge to do with that righteous man，for I haue suffred many thinges this daye in a dreame beeause of him．

Tbe first Chapter.

THIS is the begynnynge of the gospell of Iesus Christ the somne of God, as it is wrytte in the prophetes. ${ }^{a}$ Behokle, I sende my messaugger before thy faee, which shal prepare thy waye before the. ${ }^{\text {b }}$ The voyce of a cryer is in the wyldernes: Prepare the waye of the LORDE, make his pathes straight.

Ihon was in the wyldernes, and baptysed, and preached the baptyme of amendment, for the remyssion of symnes. And there wente out vnto him the whole londe of Iewry, and they of Ierusalem, and were all baptysed of him in Iordan, and knowleged their symes.
${ }^{t}$ Ihon was clothed with Camels heer, and with a lethron gerdell aboute his loynes, and ate locustes and wylde hony, and preached, and sayde: ${ }^{~}$ There commeth one after me, which is stronger then I: before whom I am not worthy to stoupe downe, and to lowse yp $\dot{y}$ lachet of his shue. I baptyse you with water, but he shal baptyse you with the holy goost.
${ }^{f}$ And it happened at the same tyme, that lesus came out of Gatile from Nazareth, and was baptysed of thon in lordan. And as soone as he was come out of the water, he sawe that the heauens opened, and the goost as a doue comynge downe ypon him. Auct there came a voyce from heaue: Thou art my deare some, ${ }^{*}$ in whon I delyte.

And immediatly the sprete droue him in to the wyldernes: ${ }^{5}$ and be was in the wyldernes fourtye dayes, and was tempted of Sathan, and was with the wylde beestes. And the angels mynistred whto him.

[^1008]But after that Ihon was taken, ${ }^{h}$ Iesus came in to Gatile, and preached the gospell of the kyngdome of God, and sayde: the tyme is fulfyllect, and the kyngdome of God is at hande: Amende youre selues, and beleue the gospell.
'So as he walked by the see of Galile, he sawe Symon and Andrew his brother, castinge their nettes in the see, for they were fyszhers. And lesus sayde vnto the : Folowe me, and I wil make you fyszhers of mé. ${ }^{k}$ And immediatly they left their nettes, and folowed him.

And when he was gone a lytle further from thence, he sawe lames the sonne of Zebede, and lhon his brother, as they were in the shyppe mendynge their nettes. And anone he calted them. And they left their father Zebede in the shyppe with the hyred seruauntes, and folowed him.
${ }^{l}$ And they wente in to Capernaum, and immediatly vpon the Sabbathes, he entred in to the synagoge, and taught. And ${ }^{m}$ they were astonnyed at his doctryne: for he taught them as one hauynge power, and not as the Scrybes.

And in their synagoge there was a man $\mathcal{C}$ possessed with a foule sprete, ${ }^{n}$ which cried and sayde: Oh what hane we to do with the, thou lesus of Nazaretb. Art thou come to destrove us? I knowe that thou art euen $\dot{y}$ holy one of God. And Iesus reproued him, and sayde: holde thy tonge, and departe out of him. And the foule sprete tare him, and eried with a loude voyce, and departed out of him. And they were all astonnyed, in so moch that they axed one another amonge the selues, sayde: What is this? What new [^1009]lernynge is this? For he comaundeth the foule spretes with power, and they are obedient vato him. And immediatly the fame of him was noysed rounde aboute in the coastes and borders of Galile.

${ }^{a}$ And forth with they wente out of the synagoge, and came in to the house of Symo and Andrew, with Iames and Ihon. And Symons mother in lawe laye, a had the feuers, and anone they tolde him of her. And he came to her, and set her vp, and toke her by y hande, and the feuer left her immediatly. And she mynistred vnto them.
${ }^{b}$ At euen whan the Sonne was gone downe, they brought wito him all that were sick and possessed, and the whole cite was gathered together at the dore, and he healed many that were diseased with dyuerse sicknesses, and cast out many deuels, and suffred not the deuels to speake, because they knew him.

And in the mornynge before daye, he arose, and wente out. And Iesus departed in to a deserte place, and prayed there. Peter also and they that were with him, folowed after him. And whan they had founde him, they sayde rnto him: Euery man seketh the. And he sayde vnto them: Let us go in to the next townes, that I maye preach there also, for therto am I come. And he preached i their synagoges, in all Galile, and droue out the deuyls.
${ }^{\text {' }}$ And there came vnto him a leper, which besought him, and kneled before him, a sayde vnto bim : If thou wilt, thou canst make me cleane. And it pitied Iesus, and he stretched forth his honde, and touched him, and sayde: I wyll, be thou cleane. And whā he had so spoken, immediatly the leprosy departed fro $\lim$, and he was clensed. ${ }^{d}$ And Iesus forbad him strately, and forth with sent him awaye, and sayde unto him: Take hede, that thou saye nothinge to eny man, but go thy waye, and shew thy self into the prest, and coffre for thy clensynge what Moses commamnded, for a wytnesse vnto them. But he whan he was departed, beganne to speake moch of it, and made the dede knowne: in so moeh that Iesus coude no more go in to the cite openly, but was without in deserte places, a they came vnto him frō all quarters.

Nenertheles there were certayne scrybes which sat there, $\pi$ thought in their hertes: How speaketh this man soch blasphemy? ${ }^{5}$ Who can forgeue synnes, but onely God? And immediatly Iesus knew in his sprete, that they thought so in the selues, and saide vato them: Why thynke ye soch thinges in youre hertes? Whether is easier to saye to the sicke of the palsye: Thy symnes are forgeue the, or to saye: aryse, take vp thy bed and walke. D sute her: Becanse of this sayenge go thy wave, the deuell is departed out of thy doinghter. And she wente suto her house, a founde that the denell was departed, and hir doughter lyenge on the bed.

And whan he wente out agayne from the coastes of Tyre and Sydon, he came ruto the see of Galile, thorow the myddes of $\frac{y}{y}$ coastes of the tex cities. And they brought ynto him one that was deaf, and had impediment in his -peach. Aud they prayed him, that he wolde laye his hande pon him.

And he toke him a syde from the people, and put his fyngers in his eares, and dyd spyt, and touched his tonge, and loked yp wito heauen, sighed, and sayde vnto him: Ephatha, that is, be opened. Aud immediatly his eares were opened, and the bonde of his toge was lowsed, and he spake right. ${ }^{\text {b }}$ And he charged hem, that they shulde tell noman.

But the more he forbad them, the more they published it, a marueyled out of measure, and sayde: * He hath done all thinges well. 'The deaf hath he made to heare, and the domme to speake.

A 'T the same tyme whan there was moch people there, and had nothinge to eate, lesus catlerl his disciples to him, and sayde suto them: I haue compassion yon the pople, for they hane taried with me now thre dayer, $r$ haue nothinge to eate. And yf I lot them go home fro me fastynge, they shutk fayme by the waye. + For some of then were come from farre. And his dis(iples answered him: Where shulde we get [^1021]bred here in the wyldernes, to satisfie them? And he axed thē: 'How many loaues haue ye? They sayde: Seuen. And he commaunded the people to syt downe vpon the grounde. And he toke the seuen loaues, and gane thākes, and brake them, and gaue the vnto his disciples to set them before the people. And they set the before the people. And they had a few small fyshes, and whan he had geuen thankes, he bad set the same before the people. They ate, and were satisfied, a toke up sené baszkettes full of $\mathfrak{y}$ broke meate that was left. And they $\frac{t}{y}$ ate, were vpo a foure thousinde. And he sent the awaye.

And forth with he wente in to a shippe with his disciples, ${ }^{d}$ and came in to the coastes of Dahmanntha. And the Pharises wente out, and begane to dispute with him, and tempted him, and desrred a token of him from heaue. And he sighed in his sprete, and sayde: ${ }^{6}$ Why doth this generacion seke a token? Verely I saye vite you: There shal no tokē be geuè mito this generacion. And be left them, and wēte againe in to the shippe, and passed ouer.
${ }^{f}$ And they forgat to take bred with them, and had nomore with them in the shippe but one loaf. And he comaunded them, and sayde: Take hede, and bewarre of the leuen of the Pharises, and of the leuen of Herode. And their myndes wanered here and there, and sayde amonge them selues: This is it, that we haue no bred. And Iesus vnderstode that, and sayde voto them: Why trouble ye youre selues, that ye haue no bred? Are ye yet without vaderstondinge? Haue ye yet a blynded hert in you? Haue ye eyes, a se not? and have ye eares, and heare not? and remübre ye not, sthat I brake fyue loanes amonge fyue thousande, how many baszkettes full of broken meate toke ye then vp? They sayde: twolue. And $\ddagger$ whan I brake the setlen amonge the foure thousande, how many baskettes full of broken meate toke ye then vp? They sayde: Seuen. And he sayde vinto the : Why are ye then without vnderstondinge?

And he came to Bethsaida, a they brought one blynde suto him, and prayed him to touch him. And he toke the blynde by the hande, and led him out of the towne, and spat in his eyes, and layed his handes rpon him, and axed him whether he sawe ought. And he loked vp, and sayde: I se men goynge as yf I sawe trees. After this he layed his handes vpon his eyes ageyne, and made him to se. And he was brought to right againe, and sawe all clearly. And he sent him home, and sayde: Go not in to $\frac{8}{y}$ towne, and tell it also vito noman therin.

And lesus wente out and his disciples into the townes of the cite Cesarea Philippi, ${ }^{a}$ And in $\hat{y}$ waye he axed his disciples and sayde vuto them: What do men saye, that I am? They answered: They saye, thou art Ihon the baptist: Some saye thon art Elias, some that thou art one of the prophetes. And he sayde rnto them: But whom saye ye that I am? Then answered Peter ${ }^{b}$ and sayde vnto him: Thou art very Christ. And he charged them strately, that they shulde tell no man of him. And he begane to teach them: "The sonne of man must suffire many thinges, and be cast out of the elders $\tau$ hye prestes and scrybes, and be put to death, and after thre dayes ryse agayne. And that worde spake he fre openly. And Peter toke him vnto him, and beganne to rebuke him. But he turned him aboute, and loked ypon his disciples, and reproued Peter, and sayde: Go after me thou Sathan, for thou sauourest not the thinges that be of God, but of men.

And he called vnto him the people with his disciples, and sayde vnto them: ${ }^{d}$ Who so euer wyl folowe me, let him denye himself, and take vp his crosse, and folowe me. ${ }^{\text {e }}$ For who so euer wyl saue his life, shal lose it: and who so euer loseth his life for my sake and y gospels, $\mathfrak{y}$ same shal save it. Or, what can a man gene, to redeme his soule withall? $f$ Who so euer is ashamed of me and of my wordes amonge this aduouterous and synfull generacion, of him shal the sonne of man also be ashamed, whan he commeth in the glory of his father with the holy angels. ${ }^{8}$ And he sayde vito them: Verely I saye mnto you: There stōde here some, which shal not taist of death, tyll they se the kyngdome of God come with power.

AND after sixe dayes lesus toke vnto him Peter, Iames and Ihon, ${ }^{,}$and brought them up in to an hye mountayne out of the waye alone, and was träsfignred before them, and his clothes were bright and very whyte as $\hat{y}$ snowe, so whyte as no fuller can make vpon earth. And there appeared ynto the Ehias with Moses, and they talked with Iesus. And Peter answered, and sayde unto lesus: Rabbi, here is good beynge for vs. Let vs make thre tabernacles: one for the, one for Moses, and one for Elias. For he knewe not what he sayde, and they were very fearfull. And there was a cloude, which ouershadowed thē. 'And out of the cloude there came a voyce, and sayde: This is my deare sonne, ${ }^{*}$ heare him. And immediatly they loked aboute them, and sawe noman more then Iesus onely with them.
${ }^{k}$ But whan they wente downe from the mountayne, lesus charged them, that they shulde tell no man what they had sene, tyll the sonne of man were rysen agayne from the deed.

And they kepte that sayenge by them, and axed one another: What is that rysinge agayne from the deed? And they axed him, and sayde: Why saye the scrybes then, that + Elias must first come? He answered and sayde onto them: Elias shal come first in dede, and brynge all thinges to right agayne. The sonne of man also shal suffre many thinges, and be despysed, $\ddagger$ as it is wrytten. But I saye vnto you: Elias is come, and they haue done vnto him what they wolde, acordinge as it is wrytten of him.
'And he came to his disciples, and sawe moch people aboute them, and the scrybes disputynge with them. And as soone as the people sawe, they were astonnyed, and ranne vnto him, and saluted him. And he axed the scrybes: What dispute ye with them? And one of the people answered, and sayde: Master, I haue brought vnto the my sonne, which hath a domme sprete: and whan so ener he taketh him, he teareth him, and he fometh, and gnaszheth with the teth, and pyneth awaye, o I haue spoken to thy [^1023]diseipher that they shulde cast him out, and they combe not.

- Ile antwered him, and sayde: $O$ thon mfaithfull generacion. how lonige shal I be with yon? How longe shat I sutfre you? Bryuge his hither to me. And they brought him vato him. Aml as some as the sprete sawe him, he tare him, and fell won the earth, and wedered and fomed. And he axed his father: How longe is it. ens this happened soto him? Hes siyde: of a childe, and oft tymes hath he (ait him in to the fyre and water, to doutroye him: but if thou camst do eny thinge, hane morey yom is, and helpe vs. Iesus sande wito him: If thou couldest beleue: Sill thinges are possible vnto him that belenoth. Ind mmediatly the father of the childe cried with teares, and sayde: LORDE I belenue: O helpe thou myne vinbeleue.

Now whan lesns sawe that the people ranne to. We rebuked the foule sprete, and sayde nuto him: 'Thou domme and deaf sprete, I charge the departe out of him, and entre nomore in to him from hence forth. And he cried, and rent him sore, and departed. And ho was as though he had bene deed, in so morh that many sayde: he is deed. But lesus toke him by the hande, and set him vp. And he arose. And whan he came home, his diseiples axed him seeretly: ${ }^{a}$ Why coulde not we cast him out? And he sayde: This kynde cai go out by no meanes, but by prayer and fistynge.

And they departed theee, and toke their iourney thorow Galile, ${ }^{b}$ and he wolde not that eny man shulde knowe of it. But he taught his tisciples. and sayde vato them: The some of ma hallie delyuered in to the handes of men, and they shal put him to death: and whan he is put to death, he shal ryse ageyne the thirde daye. But they mderstode not that worde, and were afrayed to axe him.

Aud he came to Capernaum. "Aud whan he was at home, he axed them: What disputed ye amonge youre selues by y waye? But they hell their tugges: ${ }^{d}$ For they had disputed lyy the waye anmure them selues, who shulde he ? preatest. And he sat downe, and ealled the twohue, and sayde vato them: "If eny mam w! be the tirst, the same shal be the last

Ihon answered him, and sayde: Master, we sawe one dryue out deuels in thy name, but he foloweth not vs , and we forbad him beeause he foloweth vs not. But lesus sayde: Forbyd him not: for * there is no mi that doth a myracle in my name, and can soone speake euell of me. For who so euer is not agaynst vs, the same is for vs. And who so euer geueth you a cuppe of water ${ }^{g}$ to drynke in my name, because ye belonge vnto Christ, verely I saye vnto you: he shal not lose his rewarde. And ${ }^{\text {a }}$ who so offendeth one of these litle ones that beleue in me, it were better for him, that a mylstone were hāged aboute his neek, and he cast in to the see. AND he rose rp, and came from thence in to the places of Iewry beyonde lordan. And the people wette agayne vnto him by heapes, and as his maner was he taught them agayne. And the Pharises came vinto him, and axed him, yt it were laufull for a man to [^1025]put awaye his wife, and tempted him withall. But he answered and sayde: What hath Moses cōmaunded you? ${ }^{a}$ They sayde: Moses suffred to wryte a testimoniall of deuorcemèt, and to put her awaye. Iesus answered, and sayde vnto them: Because of y hardnesse of youre hert dyd Moses wryte you this commaundement. But from the first creacion God made the man and woman. ${ }^{6}$ For this cause shal a man leane his father a mother, and cleue vito his wife, and they two shalbe one flesh. Now are they not twayne the $\bar{e}$, but one flesh. Let not man therfore put asunder that, which God hath coupled together.

And at home his disciples axed him agayne of $\hat{y}$ same. And he sayde vnto thē: Who so euer putteth awaye his wife, ${ }^{c}$ a marieth another, breaketh wedlocke to her warde. And yf a womā forsake hir huszbande, a be maried to another, she comitteth aduoutrie. he might touch them. "But the disciples reproned those that brought thē. Neuertheles whan Iesus sawe it, he was displeased, and sayde vito them: Suffre the children to come vnto me, and forbyd them not, for of soch is the kyngdome of God. Verely I saye vito you: Who so euer receaueth not the kyngdome of God as a childe, he shal not entre therin. And he toke them vp in his armes, and layed his handes ypon them, and blessed them.

And whan he was gone forth vpon the waye, there came one runninge, ${ }^{e}$ and kneled vito him, a axed him: Good Master, what shal I do, that I maye inheret euerlastinge life? But Iesus saide vato him: Why callest thou me good? There is no man good, ${ }^{f}$ but God onely. Thou knowest the commaundementes: g Thou shalt not breake wedlocke: thon shalt not kyll: thou shalt not steale: thou shalt beare no false wytnesse: thou shalt begyle no man: Honoure thy father and mother. But he answered, and sayde vnto him: Master, all these haue I kepte fro my youth vp. And Iesus behelde him, and loued him, a sayde vnto him: Thou wantest one thinge: Go thy waye, and* sell all that thou hast, and geue it mito $\dot{y}$ poore: so shalt thou haue a treasure in heauen, and come a folowe me, and take [^1026]the crosse vpon $\dot{y}$. And he was disconforted at the sayenge, a wente awaye sory, for he had greate possessions.

And Iesus loked aboute him, and sayde vnto his disciples: ${ }^{h} \mathrm{O}$ how hardly shal the ryche come in to y kyngdome of God? And the disciples were astonnyed at his wordes. But lesus answered agayne, and sayde vnto them: Deare children, how harde is it for them that trust in riches, to come in to the kyngdome of God? It is easier for a Camell to go thorow the eye of a nedle, then for a rich man to entre in to $\mathfrak{y}$ kyngdome of God. Yet were they astonnyed $\dot{y}$ more, and sayde amonge thè selues: Who can thē be saned? But lesus behelde them, and sayde: With men it is vnpossyble, but not with God: ${ }^{i}$ for with God all thinges are possyble.

Then sayde Peter vnto him: Beholde, we haue forsaken all, and folowed the. ${ }^{k}$ Iesus answered a sayde: Verely I saye vnto you: There is no man that forsaketh house, or brethren, or sisters, or father or mother, or wife, or children, or londes for my sake and the gospels, that shal not receaue an hundreth folde now in this tyme, houses, and brethre, and sisters, and mothers and children, and londes with persecucions, and in the worlde to come euerlastinge life. But many that are the first, shal be the last: and the last the first. ${ }^{l}$

They were in the waye goinge vp to Ierusalem, and Iesus wente before them. ${ }^{m}$ And they were astonnyed, and folowed him, and were afrayed. And Iesus toke the twolue agayne, and tolde them what shulde happee ynto him. Beholde, we go rp to Ierusalem, and the sonne of man shalbe delynered unto the hye prestes and scrybes, and they shal condemne him to death, and delyuer him vito the Heythe. And they shal mocke hī, and scourge him, and spyt vpon him, and put him to death, and on the thirde daye shal he ryse agayne.
${ }^{n}$ Then wēte vnto him Iames and Ihon $\mathfrak{y}$ sonnes of Zebede, and sayde: Master, We desyre, that what soeuer we axe of the, thou wilt do it for vs. He sayde vnto the: What desyre ye that I shal do to you? They sayde nnto him: Graunte vs, that we mase syt one [^1027]at thy right hande, and one at thy left hande in thy ghory. But lesus sayde mito the: Ye wote not what ye axe. Maye ye drynke the cuppe, $\dot{y}$ I shal drynke? and be baptysed with the baptyme that I shal be baptysed withall? They sayde vnto him: Yee y we maye lesus sayde vnto them: The cuppe that I drynke, shal ye drynke in dede: and be baptysed with the baptyme that I shall be baptyed withall. Neuertheles to syt at my right hande and at my left, is not nyne to geue you, but vato them for whom it is prepared.

And what the ten herde that, they disdayned at lames and Thon. But lesus called them, and sayde wnto them: Ye knowe that the prynces of $\dot{y}$ worlde haue domynacion of the people, ${ }^{a}$ and $\dot{y}$ mightie exercise anctorite amonge them. So shal it not be amonge you: but who so ener wil be greate amoge you, shal be youre mynister: and who so wyl be chefest amonge you, shalbe seruaunt of all. For the sonne of man also came not to be scrued, but to do seruyce, and * to geue his life to a redempcion for many.

And they cane vinto lericho. And whan he wente out of Iericho, ${ }^{b}$ and his disciples, and moch people, there sat one blyude Barthimeus the sonne of Thimens by y waye, aul begged. And what he herde that it was Iesus of Nazareth, he beganne to crie and saye: Iesu thou sonne of Dauid haue mercy vpon me. And many reproued him, that he shulde holde his tunge. But he cried moch more: Thou sonne of Dauid haue mercy vpo me. And Iesus stode styll, and bad eall him. And they called the blynde, and sayde vito him: Be of good conforte, aryse, he calleth the. And he east awaye his garment from him, stode rp, and came to lesus. And Iesus answered, $\tau$ sayde vinto him: What wilt thou that 1 do vito the? The blynde sayde vato him: Nlaster, that 1 might se. Iesus sayde vut, him: Go thy waye, thy faith hath holped y. And immediatly he had his sight and folowed him in the waye.

(b) xi. Chapter.

: A Ni) whan they came nye lerusalem to Bethphagee and Bethanye vito mount [^1028]Oliucte, he sent two of his disciples, and sayde vnto them: Go in to the towne that lyeth before you, and as soone as ye come in, ye shal fynde a foale bounde, wher rpon no man hath sytte: lowse it, and brynge it hither. And yf eny man saye mito you: wherfore do ye that? Then saye ye: The LORDE hath nede therof, and forth with he shal sende it hither. They wēte their waie and founde the foale tyed by y dore without at the partynge of the waye, and lowsed it. And certayne of those $\frac{t}{y}$ stode there, axed them: What do ye, that ye lowse the foale? But they sayde vnto the , like as lesus had commaunded them. And so they let them alone. And they brought the foale unto Iesus, and layed their clothes theron, and he sat theron. But many spred their garmētes in the waye: ${ }^{d}$ some cut downe braunches frō the trees, and strowed the in the waye. And they that wente before, and that folowed after, cried, and sayde : Hosyanna, ${ }^{e}$ blessed be he, that commeth in the name of the LORDE: blessed be the kyngdome of oure father Dauid, which commeth in the name of the LORDE. Hosyanna in the height.

And the LORDE entred in to Icrusalem, 13 and wente in to the temple, and loked vpon all. And at euen he wente out moto Bethany with the twolue: and on the morow ${ }^{f}$ wha they departed from Bethanye, he hūgred, and sawe a fygge tre afarre of, which had leaues. Then came he nye, ${ }^{5}$ (to se) yf he conde fynde eny thinge theron. And whan he came to it, he founde nothinge but leaues (for the tyme of fygges was not yet.) And lesus answered, and sayde vnto it: Neuer mā eate frute of the for enermore. And his disciples herde it.

And they came to Ierusalem. And Iesus wente in to the temple, and beganne to dryue out the sellers and byers in the tēple, ${ }^{h}$ c ouerthrew the tables of the money chaungers, and the stoles of the doue sellers, and suffred not eny man to cary a vessell thorow the temple. And he taught and sayde vnto them: Is it not wrytten: †My house shalbe called a house of prayer for all people? But ye hane made it a denne of murthurers.
'And the serybes and hye prestes herde of $\mathbb{C}$ it. And they sought how they might destroye [^1029]|him, but they were afrayed of him, for all the people marueled at his doctryne. And at euen he wente out of the cite. And on the morow they passed by, ${ }^{a}$ and sawe the fygge tre, that it was wythred vnto the rote. And Peter thought theron, and sayde vnto him : Master, beholde, the fygge tre ${ }^{t}$ thou cursedest, is wythred awaye. Iesus answered, and sayde vnto them: ${ }^{\circ}$ Haue faith in God. Verely I saye vuto you: Who so euer saieth muto this mountayne: Avoyde, and cast thy self in to the see, and *douteth not in his hert, but beleneth that the thinges shal come to passe which he saieth, then loke what he sayeth, it shal come to passe. "Therfore I saye vito you: What so euer ye desyre in youre prayer, beleue that ye shal receaue it, and ye shal hane it. ${ }^{d}$ And whan ye stonde and praye, forgeue yf ye have ought ageynst eny man, that youre father also in heauen, maye forgeue you youre trespaces.

And they came agayne vnto Ierusalem and whan he wente in the temple, ${ }^{e}$ there came unto him the hye prestes and scrybes and the elders, and sayde vnto him: By what auctorite dost thou these thinges? and who gaue the this auctorite to do soch?

But Iesus answered and sayde vnto the: I wil axe you a worde also, answere me, and I wyl tell you, by what auctorite I do these. The baptyme of Ihon, was it from heauen, or of men? Answere me.

And they thought in them selues: yf we saye, it was from heanen, then shal he saye: Why dyd ye not then beleue him? But yf we saye: It was of men, then feare we the people, for they all helde that Ihon was a true prophet. And they answered, and saide vnto him: We can not tell. And Iesus answered, and sayde ynto them: Nether tell I you, by what auctorite I do these thinges.

The rij. Chapter.

AND he beganne to speake vnto them by parables: A certayne mā planted a vynyarde, s and made a hedge aboute it, and dygged a wynne presse, and buylded a tower, and let it out vnto huszbande men, and wente in to a straunge countre. And whan the tyme was come, he sent a seruaūt [^1030]to the huszbande men, that he might receaue of the huszbandmen, of the frute of the rynyarde. But they toke him, and bet him, and sent him awaye emptye. Agayne, he sent vnto them another seruaunt, whom they stoned, and brake his heade, and sent him awaye shamefully dealt withall. Agayne he sent another, whom they slew, and many other: some they bett, and some they put to death.

Then had he yet one sonne onely, whom he loued, him he sent also vuto them at the last, and sayde: they wyl stonde in awe of my sonne. But the same huszbandmeu sayde amonge them selues: 'This is the heyre, Come, let vs kyll him, so shal the inheritaunce be ours. And they toke him, and slewe him, and cast him out of the vynyarde. What shal now the lorde of the vynyarde do? He shal come and destroye the huszbande men, and geue the vynyarde vnto other. Haue ye not red this scripture: ${ }^{8}$ The same stone which the buylders refused, is become the headstone in the corner? This was the LORDES doynge, and it is maruelous in oure eyes. "And they wente aboute to take him (but they feared the people) for they perceaued, that he had spokē this parable agaynst thē. And they left him, and wente their waye.

And they sent vnto him certayne of the Pharises and Herodes 'officers to take him in his wordes. And they came, and sayde vnto hì : Master, we knowe that thon art true and carest for no man. For thou regardest not the outwarde appearaunce of men, but teachest $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ waye of God truly. Is it laufull to geue tribute vito the Emperoure, or not? Ought we to geue it, or ought we not to geue it? But he perceaued their ypocrisye, and sayde vato them: Why tempte ye me? Brynge me a peny, that I maye se it. And they brought it him. Then sayde he: Whose ymage and superscripcion is this? They sayde vnto him: The Emperours. Then answered Iesus and sayde unto the: + Geue therfore vnto the Emperoure that which is the Emperours, and wato God that which is Gods. And they marueled at him.

ased him, and sayde: Master, Moses wrote vuto vs. ${ }^{\text {a }}$ If eny mans brother dye, and leate a wife, and leane no chidren, his brother shat take his wife, and rayse vp sede voto his brother. Now were there semen brethren: the first toke a wife, and dyed, and left no sede: and the seconte toke her, and dyed, and left no sede also: the thirde in like maner.

And they all seuen toke her, and left no sede. At the last after them all, the wyfe dyed adso. Now in the resurreccion whan they shal ryse agayne, whose wife shal she be of them? For senen hal her to wife.

Then answered lesus, and sayde vito them: Do not ye erre? because ye knowe not the scryptures ner $\stackrel{8}{y}$ power of God? Whan they shat ryse agayne from the deed, they shai nether mary ner be maried, but they are as the angels in heanen. And ${ }^{6}$ Iesus came agayne in the power of the sprete in to Galile. And the fame of him was noysed thorow out all $\hat{y}$ region rounde aboute. And he taught in their synagoges, and was commended of euery man.

And he came vito Nazareth where he was noursed,, and as his custome was, he wēte in to the synagoge vpon $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ Sabbath, and stode yp for to rede. Then was there delynered him the tboke of $\dot{y}$ prophet Esay. And whan he had turned ouer the boke, he fomnde the place where it is wrytten: The sprete of the LORDE is with me, , because he hath anoynted me: to preach the Gospell unto $\dot{y}$ poore hath he sent me: to heale the broken harted: to preach delyuerauce to the captyue, and sight to the blynde: and frely to set at liberty them that are brused: and to preach the acceptable yeare of the LORDE.

And whan he had closed the boke, he gave it agayne to $\mathfrak{y}$ mynister, $x$ sat him downe. And the eyes of all that were in the synagoge, were fastened on him. And he begãne to saye vito them: This daye is this scripture fulfilled in youre eares. SAd they all gave him wytnesse, and wodred at the gracions wordes, which proceaded out of his mouth, and they saide: Is not this Iosephs sonne?"

And he sayde vnto them: Doutles ye wyl saye nuto me this pronerbe: Phisician, heale thyself. For how greate thinges haue we herde done at Capernaū? Do the same here also in thine owne countre. But he saide: Verely I saye unto you: There is no prophet accepted in his owne countre. ${ }^{i}$ Neuertheles of a trueth I saye vuto you: $\|$ There were many wedowes in Israel in ${ }^{f}$ tyme of Elias, whā the heaue was shut thre yeares and sixe monethes, and whan there was a greate derth in all the lande: a to none of the was Ehias sent, but onely vito Sarepta of the Sydonyans to a wedowe. For the labourer is worthy of his rewarde.

Go not from house to house. And in to what so euer cite ye entre, and they receave you, eate soch thinges as are set before you. And heale the sicke that are there, and saye vnto them: The kyngdome of God is come nye vnto you. ${ }^{8}$ But in to what so euer cite ye come, and they receaue you not, go youre waye out in to the stretes of the same, and saye: Euen the very dust which cleaueth vpon vs of youre cite, wype we of vpon you. But of this ye shal be sure, that the kyngdome of God was come nye vato you. I saye vito you: It shalbe easyer for Sodome in that daye, then for that cite.

He that heareth you, heareth me $:^{*}$ and he that despyseth you, despyseth me: but who so despyseth me, despyseth him $\stackrel{t}{y}$ sent me.

The seuētye came agayne with ioye, and sayde: LORDE, the deuels also are subdued vito vs in thy name. But he sayde vnto them: ${ }^{a}$ I save Sathan fall downe from heauen as a lightenynge. Beholde, *I haue geuen you power to treade vpon serpétes and seorpions, and ouer all power of the enemye, and nothinge shall hurte you. Neuertheles, reioyee not ye in this, that the spretes are subdued unto you: but reioyse, that youre names are wrytten in heauen.

At the same houre reioysed lesus in sprete, and sayde: ${ }^{b} \mathrm{I}$ prayse the ( O father and LORDE of heauen and earth) that thou hast hyd these thinges from the wyse and prudent, and hast opened them vnto babes. 'All thinges are geuen ouer vnto me of my father: $\ddagger$ and no man knoweth who the some is, but onely the father: nether who the father is, saue onely the sonne, and he to whō the sonne will open it.

And he turned him vnto his disciples, and sayde in espeeiall: Blessed are the eyes, whieh se that ye se. For I saye vito you: ${ }^{d}$ Many prophetes and kynges, wolde haue sene the thynges that ye se, and have not sene them: and to haue herde the thynges that ye heare, and haue not herde them.

And beholde, there stode rp a serybe and tempted him, and sayde: Master, what must I do, to inheret euerlastinge life? He sayde vuto him: What is wrytten in the lawe? How readest thou? He answered and sayde: ${ }^{e}$ Thou shalt loue thy LORDE God with all thy hert, with all thy soule, with all thy strength, and with all thy mynde, and §thy neghboure as thy self. He sayde vnto him: Thou hast answered right: this do, and thou shalt lyue. But he wolde haue iustified himself, a sayde vnto lesus: Who is then my neghboure?

Then answered lesus, and sayde: A certayne man wente downe from Ierusalem vnto lericho, and fell amonge murthurers, whieh stryped him out of his elothes, and wounded him, and wente their waye, and left him half deed. And by chaüce there came downe a prest the same waye: and whan he sawe him, he passed by. And likewyse a [^1056]Leuite, whā he eame nye vnto the same place and sawe him, he passed by. But a Samaritane was goynge his iourney, and eame that waye, and whan he sawe him, he had compassion vpon him, wente vnto him, bounde vp his woundes, and poured oyle and wyne therin, and lifte him vp vpon his beast, and brought him in to the ynne, and made prouysion for him. Vpon the next daye whan he departed, he toke out two pens, and gane them to the oost, and sayde vnto him: Take eure of him, and what so euer thou spendest more, I wil paye it the, whan I come agayne. Which of these thre now thinkest thou, was neghboure vnto him, that fell amonge the murtherers? He sayde: He that shewed mercy vpon him. Then sayde lesus vnto him: Go thy waye then, and do thou likewyse.

It fortuned as they wete, that he entred in to a towne, where there was a woman named Martha, which receaued him in to hir house. And she had a sister, ealled Mary, ${ }^{f}$ which sat hir downe at lesus fete, and herkened vnto his worde. But Martha made hir self moch to do, for to serue him. But Iesus answered, and sayde vnto her: Martha Martha. thou takest thought, and combrest thy self aboute many thinges: lithere is but one thinge nedefull. Mary hath ehosen a good parte, which shal not be taken awaye from her.

AND it fortuned that he was in a place, and prayed. And whan he had ceassed, one of his diseiples sayde unto him: LORDE, teaeh vs to praye, as Ihon also taught his diseiples. He sayde vnto the : Whan ye praye, saye: $O$ oure father which art in heauen, halowed be thy name. Thy kyngdome eome. Thy wil be fulfilled vpon earth, as it is in heauen. Geue vs this daye oure daylie bred. And forgeue vs oure synnes, for we also forgeue all them that are detters vnto vs. And lede vs not in to temptaeion, but delyner rs from euell.

And he sayde vnto them: Whieh of you is it that hath a frende, and shulde go to him

Or yf he axe a fyszhe, wyl he for the fish offre him a serpent? Or yf he axe an egg, wy he profer him a scorpion? If ye then which are euell, can geue youre children good giftes, how moch more shal the father of heauen geue the holy sprete vnto them that axe him?
${ }^{b}$ And he droue out a deuell that was domme: and it came to passe whan the deuell was departed out, the domme spake, and the people wondred. But some of them sayde $:\{$ He dryueth out the deuels, thorow Beelzebub the chefe of the deuels. The other tempted him, and desyred a token of him from heauen. If Sathan then be at variaunce within himself, how shal his kyngdome endure? Because ye saye, that I dryue out deuels thorow Beelzebub.

And yf I dryue out deuels thorow Beelzebul, by whom the do youre children dryue them out? Therfore shall they be youre iudges. But yf I cast out the denels by the fynger of God, then is the kyngdome of God come wato you.

'Whan the vncleane sprete is gone out of a man, he walketh thorow drye places, sekynge rest, and fyndeth none. Then sayeth he: I wil turne agayne in to my house, from whence I wente out. And whan he commeth, he fyndeth it swepte, and garnished. Then goeth he, and taketh voto him seuen other spretes, worse the hinnself. And whan they are entred im, they dwell there. And the ende of that man is worse then the begynnynge.

And it fortuned whan he spake soch, a certayne woman amonge the people lift vp hir voyce, and sayde voto him: Blessed is $\dot{y}$ wombe that bare the, and the pappes that thou hast sucked. But he sayde: Yee blessed are they that heare the worde of God, and kepe it.

Whan the people were gathered thicke together, he beganne to saye: ${ }^{f}$ This is an euell generacion, they desyre a tokē, and there shal no token be geuen them, but the toke of the prophet lonas. + For like as Ionas was a toke vnto the Niniuytes, so shal the sonne of man be into this generacion. "The quene of the south shal aryse at the iudgmèt with the men of this generacion, and shall condempne them: for she came from the ende of the worlde, to heare the wyszdome of Salomon. And beholde, here is one more then Salomon. THERE were present at the same season certayne, that shewed him of $\dot{y}$ *Galileans, whose bloude Pilate had mēgled with their awne sacrifice. [^1062]Ierusalem? I tell you naye : but excepte ye amende youre selues, ye shal all perishe likewyse.
And he tolde them this symilitude : A certayne mā had a fygge tre, which was planted in his vynyarde, $\mathbb{T}$ he came and sought frute theron, and founde none. Then sayde he vnto the wynegardener: Beholde, This thre yeare longe haue I come euery yeare, and sought frute vpon this fygge tre, and fynde none: cut it downe, why hyndreth it the grounde? But he answered, and sayde: Syr, let it alone yet this yeare, tyll I dygge roūde aboute it and donge it, yf it wyl brynge forth frute: If no, then cut it downe afterwarde.

And he taught in a synagoge vpon the Sabbath: and beholde, there was a womã, which had a sprete of infirmyte eightene yeares, and was croked, and coulde not well loke y.p. Whan Iesus sawe her, he called her to him, and sayde vnto her: Woman, be delyuered from thy disease. And he layed his handes rpo her, and immediatly she was made straight, and praysed God. Then answered the ruler of the synagoge, and toke indignacion (because lesus healed vpō $\mathfrak{y}$ Sabbath) and sayde vato the people: There are sixe dayes, wherin men ought to worke, in them come and be healed, and not on the Sabbath.

Then the LORDE answered him, and sayde: Thou ypocryte, doth not euery one of you lowse his oxe or asse frō the crybe spo Sabbath, and leade him to the water? But shulde not this (which is Abrahams doughter) whom Sathan hath bounde now eightene yeares, be lowsed from this bonde ypō the Sabbath? And whan he thus sayde, all his aduersaries were ashamed. And all the people reioysed ouer all the excellent dedes, that were doue by him.

And he sayde: 'What is the kyngdome of God like? Or wher rnto shal I cöpare it? It is like a grayne of mustarde sede, which a man toke, and cast in lis garden: and it grewe, and waxed a greate tre, and the foules of the ayre dwelt amonge the braunches of it.

And the Apostles sayde vnto $\mathrm{y}_{\mathrm{i}}$ LORDE: Increace oure faith. The LORDE sayde: Yf ye haue faith as a grayne of mustarde sede, ${ }^{\text {c }}$ and saye vnto this Molbery tre: Plueke thy self vp by the rotes, and plate thy self in the see, it shalbe obediēt vnto you. Which of you is it, that hath a seruaunt (which ploweth, or fedeth the catell) whā he commeth home from $\frac{0}{}$ felde, that he wil saye vnto him: Go quyckly, and syt the down to meate? Is it not thus? that he sayeth vnto him: Make rearly, that I maye suppe, gyrde vp thyself, and serue me, tyil I haue eaten and dronken, afterwarde shait thou eate and drynke also. Thanketh he the same seruaunt also, becanse he dyd that was commaunded him? I trowe not. So likewyse ye, whā ye haue done all that is comanded you, saye: We are mprofitable seruamntes, we hane done that we were bounde to do.

And it fortuned, whan he toke his iourney towarde lerusalem, he wente thorow the myddest of Samaria and Gatile. And as he came in to a towne, there met him ten leporous men, which stode afarre of, and lift vp their voyce, and sayde: Iesu master, haue mercy vpon vs. And whan he sawe them, he sayde vnto the : *Go, and shewe youre selues vnto $\frac{y}{y}$ prestes. And it cane to passe, as they wente, they were clensed. And one of them whā he sawe that be was clensed, he turned backe agayne, and praysed God with londe voyce, and fell downe on his face at his fete, and gaue him thankes. And the same was a Samaritane. Iesus answered and saide : Are there not ten clensed? But where are those nyne? There were els none founde, that turned agayne, and gaue God the prayse, saue onely this straüger. And he sayde vnto him: Aryse, go thy waye, thy faith hath made $y$ whole.

But whan he was demaunded of $y$ Pharises: Whan eometh the kyngdome of God? He answered them, and sayde: 'The kyngdome of God commeth not with outwarde appearaunce, nether shat it be sayde: lo, here or there is it. For beholde, $\hat{y}$ kyngdome of God is inwarde in you.

And he sayde to the disciples: The tyme shal come, whā ye shal desyre to se one daye [^1069]of the somue of man, and shal not se it. And they shal saye vito you: "se here, se there (io not ye, nether folowe, for as the lightenynge shynetl aboue from the heauen, and lighteth oner all that is vuder the heaue, so shal the some of ma be in his daye. ${ }^{c}$ And as it came to passe in the tyme of Noe, so shal it come to passe also in $\dot{\dot{y}}$ dayes of the some of man. They ate, they dranke, they maried, and were maried, euen vnto $\dot{y}$ rlaye that Noe weute in to the Arke, and $\dot{y}$ floude eame, and destroyed them all.

Likewyse also as it eame to passe in the tyme of Lot, they ate, they dranke, they bought, they solde, they planted, they buylded. But enen the same daye that Lot wente out of Sodom, ${ }^{d}$ it rayned fyre and brymstone from heaue, and destroyed them all. After this maner also shal it go, in the daye whan the some of man shal appeare.

In that daye, who so is vpo the rofe, and his stuffe in $\dot{y}$ house, ${ }^{e}$ let him not come downe to feteh it: Likewyse he that is in the felde, let him not turne baeke, for it that is behynde him. * Remēbre Lottes wife. "HE tolde them a symilitude, ${ }^{4}$ signifienge, ${ }_{\mathrm{y}}^{\mathrm{t}}$ men ought allwayes to praye, et not to leaue of, a sayde: There was a iudge in a eite, which feared not God, and stode in awe of no man. And in the same eite there was a wedowe, whieh came vnto him, and sayde : delytuer me fro myne aduersary. And he wolde not a greate whyle. But afterwarde he thought within his self: Though I feare not (iod, r stonde in awe of no man, yet seynge [^1070]this weddowe is so importune vpon me, I wil delyuer her, lest she come at the last, and rayle vpon me.

Then sayde the LORDE: Heare what $\hat{y}$ vnrighteous iudge sayeth. But shall not God also delyuer his chosen, that erye vinto hi daye and night, though he differre the ? I saye vinto you: He shal delyuer them, and that shortly. Neuertheles, whan the sonne of man cometh, suppose ye, that he shal fynde faith rpon earth ?

And unto eertayne which trusted in the selues, that they were perfeete, and despysed other, he spake this symilitude: There wente yp two men in to the teple, to praye: the one a Pharise, the other a publican. The Pharise stode, and prayed by himself after this maner: - I thanke the God, that I am not as other men, robbers, vnrighteous, aduouters, or as this publican. I fast twyse in the weke, I geue the tithes of all that I haue. And the publican stode afarre of, and wolde not lift vp his eyes to heauen, but smote vpon his brest, and sayde: God be thou mereyfull vnto me symner. I tell you: This man wente downe in to his house fustified more the the other. ${ }^{*}$ For who so euer exalteth himself, shalbe brought lowe: and he that humbleth himself, shalbe exalted.
'They brought yonge children also vnto him, that he shulde touch them. But whan the disciples sawe that, they rebuked them. Neuertheles Iesus ealled them vnto him, and sayde: Suffre childree to come vnto me, and forbyd the not, for of soch is y kyngdome of God. Verely I saye vnto you: Whosoeuer receaueth not $\hat{y}$ kyngdome of God as a childe, shal not enter therin.

And a certayne ruler axed him, and sayde: ${ }^{m}$ Good master, what must I do, that I maye enheret euerlastinge life? But Iesus sayde unto him: Why eallest thou me good? There is no man good, but God onely. Thou knowest the comaundementes: Thou shalt not breake wedlocke: Thou shalt not kyll : ${ }^{n}$ Thou shalt not steale: Thou shalt not beare false wytnesse: Honoure thy father and thy mother. But he sayde: All these have I kepte fro my youth rp. Whan Iesus herde that, he sayde into him: Yet lackest thou one

${ }^{a}$ Whan Iesus sawe that he was sory, he sayde: How hardly shal the riche come in to the kyngdome of God? It is easyer for a Camell to go thorow the eye of a nedle, the for a rich man to entre in to the kyngdome of God. Then sayde they $\frac{t}{y}$ herde that: Who can then be saued? But he sayde: loke what is vnpossible with mè, is possible with God. ${ }^{b}$

Then sayde Peter: Beholde, we have forsake all, and folowed the. He sayde vnto the : ${ }^{\text {c }}$ Verely I saye vnto you: There is no mā $\stackrel{t}{y}$ forsaketh house, or elders, or brethren, or wife, or children for the kyngdome of Gods sake, which shal not receaue moch more in this tyme, and euerlastinge life in the worlde to come.

He toke vnto him the twolue, and sayde vito them: "Beholde, we go vp to Ierusale, and it shal all be fulfilled, that is wrytten by the prophetes of the sonne of man. For he shal be delyuered vato y Heythen, and shalbe mocked, ${ }^{c}$ and despytefully intreated, and spitted ypon: and whan they haue scourged him, they shal put him to death, and vpon the thirde daye shal he aryse agayne. *And they viderstode nothinge of these thinges. And this sayenge was hyd from them, and they perceaued not the thinges that were spoken.
${ }^{f}$ And it came to passe, whan he came nye vnto Iericho, there sat one blynde by the waye, and begged. And whan he herde the people passe by, he axed what it was. Then sayde they unto him, that Iesus of Nazareth passed by. And he cryed, and sayde: Iesu thou sonne of Dauid, haue mercy vpon me. But the people that wente before, rebuked him, that he shulde holde his tunge. Neuertheles he cried moch more: Thou sonne of Dauid have mercy ypō me. Iesus stode styl, a cōmaunded hì to be brought vnto hi. And whan he was come neare, he axed him and sayde: What wilt thou, that I do vnto the ? He sayde: LORDE, that I maye receaue my sight. AND he entred in, and wente thorow Iericho: at beholde, there was a man named Zaeheus, which was a ruler of the publicans, and was riche, and desyred to se Iesus what he shulde be, and he coulde not for the people, for he was lowe of stature. And he ranne before, and clymmed vp in to a wylde fygge tre, that he might se him: for he shulde come $\dot{y}^{t}$ waye. And whan Iesus came to the same place, he loked vp, and sawe him, and sayde vnto him: Zache, come downe haistely, for to daye must I turne in to thy house. And he came downe hastely, and receaned himt with ioye. Whan they sawe that, they murmured all, and sayde, $\frac{t}{y}$ he was gone in, to a synner.

But Zacheus stode forth, and sayde vnto the LORDE: Beholde LORDE, the half of my goodes gene I to the poore: and yf I haue defrauded eny man, I restore him foure folde. Iesus sayde vnto him: This daye is health happened vnto this house, for so moch as he also is Abrahams sonne. $\ddagger$ For the sonne of mā is come, to seke and to save that which was lost.

And $\hat{y}$ thirde came, and sayde: Lo syr, here is thy pounde, which 1 haue kepte in a napkyn. I was afrayed of the, for thou art an harde man, thou takest up $\dot{y}$ thou hast not layed downe, and reapest that thou hast not sowne. He sayde vito him: *Of thine awne mouth iudge I the thou euell seruaunt. Knewest thou that I am an harde man, takynge op that I layde not downe, and reapynge that I dyd not sowe? Wherfore then hast thou not delyuered my money to the exchaunge banke? And at my commynge might I haue requyred myne awne with vauntage?

Aud he sayde vnto them that stode by: Take y pounde from him, and geue it vnto him that hath ten pounde. And they sayde nnto him: Syr, he hath ten pounde already. But I saye vnto yon: ${ }^{a}$ Whosoener hath, vnto him shal be geue: but from him that hath not, shal be taken awaye euen that he hath. And whan he had thus sayde, he wète on forwarde, and toke his iourney vp to Ierusalem.
${ }^{b}$ And it fortuned whan he came nye to Bethphage and Bethany moto mount Oliuete, he sent two of his disciples, and sayde: Go in to the towne that lyeth ouer agaynst you, and assone as ye are come in, ye shal fynde a foale tyed, wheron yet neuer man satt, lowse it, and brynge it hither. And yf eny mā axe you wherfore ye lowse it, saye thus vnto him. The LORDE hath nede therof.

And they that were sent, wête their waye and founde euen as he had sayde. But whà they lowsed y foale, the owners therof sayde moto the: Why lowse ye the foale? They sayde: The LORDE hath nede therof. And they brought it vnto Iesus, and cast their elothes vpō the foale, and set Iesus theron. 'Now as he wente, they spred their garmentes in the waye.

And whan he wēte downe fro mount Oliuete, $\hat{y}$ whole multitude of his disciples

[^1073]begāne ioyfully to prayse God with loude voyce, ouer all the miracles that they had sene, and sayde: ${ }^{d}$ Blessed be he, that cometh a kynge in the name of the LORDE. + Peace be in heanen, and prayse in the height. And some of the Pharises amonge the people sayde vnto him: Master, rebuke thy disciples. And whan he was come neare, he behelde the eite, and $\oint$ wepte vpo it, and sayde: Yf thou knewest what were for thy peace, thou shuldest remébre it euen in this present daye of thine. But now is it hyd from thine eyes. ${ }^{e}$ For the tyme shal come vpon the, that thine enimies shal cast vp a bake aboute the, and aboute thy children with the, and besege $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$, and kepe the in on euery syde, and make the eauen with the grounde, and shal not leaue in the one stone vpon another, because thou hast not knowne y tyme, wherin thou hast bene visited.
${ }^{f}$ And he wente in to the temple, and begane to dryue out them that bought and solde therin, and sayde vnto them: It is wrytten: My house is an house of prayer, but ye haue made it a denne of murthurers. And he taught daylie in the tēple. But the hye prestes and the serybes and the chefest of $\dot{y}$ people wente aboute to destroye him, ${ }^{5}$ and founde not, what to do vnto him. AND it fortuned one of those dayes, whan he taught the people in the teple, ${ }^{h}$ and preached the Gospell, the hye prestes and serybes came to him with the Elders, and spake vnto him, and sayde: Tell vs, by what auctorite doest thou these thinges? Or who gaue the this auctorite? But he answered, a sayde vnto the: I wil axe you a worde also, tell it me: The baptyme of Ihō was it from heauen, or of men? But they thought in them selues, and sayde : Yf we saye, from heauen, then shal he saye: Why dyd ye not the beleue him? But yf we saye, of men, then shal all the people stone vs, for they be persuaded, that Ihon is a prophet. And they answered, that they coulde not tell, whence it was. And Iesus sayde vnto them: Nether tell I you, by what auctorite I do these thinges.

And he beganne to tell the people this symilitude : ${ }^{\text {a }}$ A certayne man planted a vynyarde, and let it out vnto huszbādmen, and wente himself in to a straunge countre for a greate season. And whan his tyme was come, he sent a seruañt to the huszbādmen, that they might geue him of the frute of the vynyarde. But the huszbandmen bet him, and sent him awaye emptye. And agayne he sent yet another seruaūt: but they bet him also, and intreated him shamefully, a sent him T awaye emptye. And besydes this, he sent the thirde: but they wounded him also, and thrust him out. Then sayde the lorde of the vynyarde: What shal I do? I wil sende my * deare sonne, peraduenture they wil stonde in awe of him, whan they se him.

But whan the huszbande men sawe the sonne, they thought in the selues, and sayde : This is the heyre, come, let vs kyll him, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ the inheritaunce maye be oures. And they thrust him out of $\frac{\mathrm{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ vynyarde, and slew him. What shal now the lorde of the vynyarde do unto them? He shal come, and destroye those huszbandmen, and let out his vynyarde vnto other. Whan they herde that, they sayde: God forbyd.

But he behelde the, and sayde: What is this then that is wrytten: ${ }^{b}$ The same stone which the buylders refused, is become the head corner stone? Who so euer falleth vpon this stone, shalbe broken in sunder: but vpō whō so euer he falleth, he shall grynde him to poulder. ${ }^{\text {c }}$ And the hye prestes and scrybes wente aboute to laye handes vpon him the same houre, and they feared the people: for they perceaued, that he had spokē this symilitude agaynst them.

And they watched $h \bar{i}$, a sent forth spyes, which shulde tayne the selues perfecte, ${ }^{d}$ that they might take him in his wordes, to delyuer him vnto the power and auctorite of y debite. And they axed him, a sayde: Master, we knowe that thou sayest a teachest right, and regardest the outwarde appearaūce of no man, but teachest the waye of God truly. Is it laufull, that we geue tribute vnto the Em-

[^1074]peroure, or not? But he perceaued their craftynes, and sayde vnto them: Why tepte ye me? Shewe me the peny. Whose ymage and superscripeion hath it? They answered, and sayde: The Emperours. Then sayde he vnto them: Geue the vnto the Emperoure, that which is the Emperours: a moto God, that which is Gods. And they coude not reproue his worde before the people, and marueyled at his answere, and helde their peace.
${ }^{e}$ Then came vnto him certayne of the Saduces (which holde that there is no resurreccion) and axed him, and sayde : Master, Moses wrote vato vs, yf eny mans brother dye hauynge a wife, and dyeth without childrée, ${ }^{\prime}$ then shal his brother take his wife, and rayse yp sede vito his brother. Now were there seue brethrè : the first toke a wife, and dyed childlesse : and the seconde toke the wife, and dyed without children also: and the thirde toke her, likewyse all the seuē, and left no children behynde thē, and dyed. At the last after them all, the woman dyed also. Now in the resurreccion, whose wife shal she be of them? For seuen had her to wife. And Iesus answered and saide vnto them: The childre of this worlde mary, a are maried, but they $\stackrel{t}{y}$ shalbe worthy to enioye that worlde and the resurreccion from the deed, shal nether mary ner be maried, for they can dye nomore. For they are like ruto the angels, and are the $\pm$ children of God, in so moch as they are children of the resurreccion.

But that the deed ryse agayne, hath Moses also signified besydes the bush, when he called the LORDE, the God of Abraham, ${ }^{5}$ the God of Isaac, and the God of Iacob. But God is not a God of the deed but of the lyuynge, for they lyue all vito him. Then answered certayne of the scrybes, and sayde: Master, thou haist sayde well. And from that tyme forth they durst axe him no mo questions.
${ }^{4}$ But he sayde vito them: How saye they that Christ is Danids sonne? And Dauid himself sayeth in the boke of the l'salmes: The LORDE sayde unto my LORDE: ${ }^{\text {a }}$ Syt thou on my right honde, tyll I make thine enemies thy fote stole. Dauid calleth him LORDE, how is he then his sonne?

[^1075]${ }^{a}$ Now whyle all the people gaue audience, he sayde ruto his disciples: Bewarre of the serybes, which wyl go in longe garmentes, and loue to be saluted ypon the market, and desyre to syt hyest in the synagoges, and at the table. They denoure wedowes houses, and that ruder a culoure of longe prayenge: 'These shal receaue the greater danacion.

'And then shal they se the some of man commynge in the eloude with power and greate glory. But whan these thinges begynne to come to passe, the loke rp, and lift vpp youre heades, for youre redempeion draweth nye.

And he tolde them a symilitude: Beholde the fygge tre, ${ }^{m}$ and all the trees, whā they now shute forth their buddes, ye se by them, and perceaue, that Sommer is now at hande. So likewyse ye, whan ye se all these thinges come to passe, be sure that the kyngdome of God is nye. Verely I saye vnto you: This generaciō shal not passe, tyll all be fulfilled. Heauen and earth shal passe, but my wordes shal not passe.

[^1077]${ }^{a}$ But take hede vnto youre selues, that youre hertes be not ouerlade with excesse of eatinge and with dronkennes, and with takinge of thought for lyuynge, and so this daye come vō you unawares. In him was the $\dagger$ life, and the life was the $\ddagger$ light of men: and the light shyneth in the darknesse, and the darknesse comprehended it not.

There was sent from God a man, whose name was Ihon. The same came for a witnesse, to beare wytnesse of y light, that thorow him they all might beleue. $\oint$ He was not that light, but that he might beare witnesse of y light. That was the true light, which lighteth all men, that come in to this worlde. He was in the worlde, a the worlde was made by him, and $\mathfrak{y}$ worlde knewe him not. He came in to his awne, and his awne receaued him not. But as many as receaued him, \|to them gaue he power to be the children of God: euen soch as beleue in his name. And I sawe it, and bare recorde, that this is the sonne of God.

The nexte daye after, Thon stode agayne, and two of his disciples. And whā he sawe lesus walkynge, he sayde: Beholde the *labe of God. And two of his disciples herde him speake, and folowed Iesus. And lesus turned him aboute, and sawe them folowinge, and sayde vinto the: What seke ye? They sayde rnto him: Rabbi, (which is to saye by interpretacion, Master.) Where art thou at lodginge? He sayde vnto them: Come and se it. They cane and sawe it, $\mathbb{r}$ abode with him the same daye. It was abonte the tenth houre.

One of the two, which herde Ihon speake, and folowed Iesus, was Andrew the brother of Symon Peter: the same founde first his brother Symon, and sayde vito him: We haue founde Messias (which is by interpretacion, ${ }^{\circ}$ Anoynted) and brought him to Iesus. Whan lesus behelde him, he sayde: Thou art Symon the some of Jonas, ${ }^{\text {, thou shalt be }}$ called Cephas, which is by interpretacion, a stone.

AND ypon the thirde daye there was a mariage at Cana in Galile, and the mother of lesus was there. lesus also and his disciples was called vnto $\frac{8}{y}$ mariage. And whan the wyne fayled, the mother of Iesus saide vnto him: They haue no wyne. Iesus saycle vuto her: © Womā, what have I to do with the? Myne houre is not yet come. His mother sayde unto y mynisters: Whatsoeuer he sayeth vito you, do it. There were set there sixe water pottes of stone, after $\grave{y}$ maner of the purifienge of $\mathfrak{y}$ lewes, euery one cōteyninge two or thre measures.

Iesus sayde vito the : Fyll the water pottes with water. And they fylled the vp to ${ }^{\circ}$ brymme. And he sayde vnto the : Drawe out now, a brynge vnto the Master of the feast. And they bare it. Wha the master of $\hat{y}$ feast had taisted $\mathfrak{y}$ wyne which had bene water, and knewe not whence it came (but the mynisters that drue ${ }^{\circ}$ water, knewe it) the Master of the feast called the brydegrome, and sayde vnto him: Euery man at the first geueth the good wyne: © whan they are dronken, thē that which is worse. But thou hast kepte backe the good wyne rotyll now.

This is the first token that Iesus dyd at Cana in Galile, and shewed his glory, and his disciples beleued on him. ${ }^{d}$ Afterwarde wente he downe to Capernaum, he, his mother, his brethre, and his disciples, and taried not longe there.
'And the lewes Easter was at hande. And Iesus wēte yp to Ierusalem, and founde syttinge in the teple, those that solde oxen, shepe, and doues, and chaungers of money.

His disciples remembred it, that is wrytten : *The zele of thine house hath euen eaten me.

Then answered the Iewes, and sayde vnto him: ${ }^{a}$ What token shewest thou vito vs, that thou mayest do these thinges? Iesus answered © sayde vnto the : $\dagger$ Breake downe this temple, and in thre dayes wil I set it vp agayne. ${ }^{9} T$HERE was a man of the Pharises, named Nicodemus ${ }^{b}$ a ruler amōge the Iewes. The same came vnto Iesus by night, a sayde vnto hī: Master, we knowe y thou art come a teacher frō God: for Ilno mā can do these tokēs $\frac{t}{y}$ thou doest, excepte God be with him. Iesus answered, and sayde vnto him: Verely verely I saye vnto the: Excepte a man be borne a new, he can not se the kyngdome of God. Nicodemus sayde vnto him: How can a man be borne, whan he is olde? Can he entre in to his mothers wombe, and be borne agayne? Iesus answered: Verely verely I saye vnto the: "Excepte a mā be borne of water and of the sprete, he can not come in to y kyngdome of God.
 That which is borne of flesh, is flesh: a that which is borne of the sprete, is sprete. Maruell not, that I sayde vnto y : Ye must be borne of new. The wynde bloweth where Nicodemus answered, and sayde vito him : How maye these be? Iesus answered, a sayde vnto hī: Art thou a Master in Israel, $\tau$ knowest not these? Verely I saye vnto $\mathfrak{y}$ : We speake that we knowe, and testifie that we haue sene, and ye receaue not oure wytnesse. " ${ }^{\text {ch }}$ And like as Moses lift vp the serpent in the wyldernes, euen so must the sonue of man be lift $v p$, that who so ener beleueth in him, shulde not perish, but haue euerlastinge life.

${ }^{4}$ For God so loned the worlde, that he gane his onely sonne, that who so euer beleueth in hi, shulde not perishe, but haue euerlastinge life. $\bar{y}$ For God sent not his some in to $\dot{y}$ worlde to condempne the worlde, but that the worlde might be saued by him. He that beleueth on him, shal not be cōdemned. But he that beleueth not, is cödemned allready: because he beleueth not on the name of the onely sonne of God. But this is y cödempnacion, "that the light is come in to the worlde, and men loned the darknesse more the $f$ light: for their workes were euell. Whosoeuer doth euell, hateth the light, and cometh not to the light, that his dedes shulde not be reproued. But he that doth the trueth, commeth to the light, that his workes maye be knowne: for they are done in God.

Afterwarde came Iesus a his disciples in to the lode of Iewry, and had his beynge there with them, and jbaptysed. IIII Ihon baptysed also in Enon besyde Salem: for there was moel water there. And they came thither, and were baptysed: for Ihon was not yet put iin preson.
'Then arose there a question amonge the disciples of Ihon with the Iewes aboute the purifienge, and they came vito Ihon, and sayde vnto him: Master, he $\dot{y}$ was with the

Ye youre selues are my witnesses, how *that I sayde, I am not Christ, but am sent before him. He that hath the bryde, is the brydegrome: but the frende of the brydegrome stondeth, and herkeneth unto him, and reiosseth greatly oner the voyce of the brydegrome, this same ioye of myne is now fulfilted. He must increace, but I must decreace.

He that commeth from an hye, is aboue all. He that is of the earth, is earthly, and speaketh of the earth. He that commeth frō heauen, is aboue all, and testifieth what he hath sene $\mathbb{T}$ herde, and no man receaueth his wytnesse. But he that receaueth it, hath set to his seale, t that God is true. But in the myddes of the feast wēte Iesus vp in to the temple, and taught. And the lewes marueyled and sayde: How can he $\dot{y}$ scrypture, seynge he hath not lerned it? Iesus answered them, and sayde: My doctryne is not myne, but his that hath sent me. If eny man wyl do his will, he shal knowe, whether this doctryne be of God, or whether I speake of my self. He that speaketh of himself, seketh his awne prayse: but he that seketh the prayse of him that sent him, the same is true, a there is no varighteousues in him. ${ }^{c}$ Hath not Moses geuen you the lawe, and none of you kepeth the lawe? IESUS wente vnto mount Oliuete, ${ }^{b}$ and early in the mornynge came he agayne in to the temple, and all the people came vnto him. And he sat downe, and taught them. And $\dot{y}$ serybes and Pharises brought vnto him a woman taken in aduoutrye, and set her there ofenly, and sayde vato him: Master, this woman was taken in aduoutrye, euē as the dede was adoynge. ${ }^{c}$ Moses in the lawe commaunded vs to stone soch. What sayest thou? This they sayde, to tempte him, that they might haue wherof to accuse him. But lesus stouped downe, and wrote with his fyuger vpō the grounde. Now whyle they contynued axynge him, he lift him self vp, and sayde vnto them: He that is amonge you without synne, let him cast the first stone at her. And he stouped downe agayne, and wrote ypon the grounde. But whan they herde that, they wente out, one after another: the eldest first, and left Iesus alone, and the woman stondinge before him. ส CIXE dayes before Easter came Iesus N vnto ${ }^{\text {a Bethanye, where Lazarus was, }}$ which was deed, whom Iesus raysed vp from the deed. There they made him a supper, and Martha serued. But Lazarus was one of them, that sat at the table with him. $\ddagger$ Then toke Mary a pounde of oyntment of pure and costly Nardus, and anoynted Iesus fete, a dryed his fete with hir heer. The house was full of the sauoure of the oyntment. Then sayde one of his diseiples, Iudas Isearioth Symons sonne, which afterwarde betrayed him: Why was not this oyntment solde for thre hundreth pens, and geuen to the poore? (This sayde he not that he eared for the poore, but because he was a thefe, and shad the bagge, and bare that which was geuc̄.) Then sayde Iesus: Let her alone, this hath she kepte agaynst the daye of my

Then moch people of the Iewes had knowlege, that he was there, and they came not for Iesus sake onely, but also $\frac{\mathrm{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ they might se Lazarus, whom he had raysed from the deed. But $\dot{y}$ hye prestes were aduysed to put Lazarus to death also : because y for his sake many of the Iewes wete awaye and belened on Iesus.
${ }^{6}$ Vpon the nexte daye moch people which were come vito the feast, whan they herde that Iesus came towarde Ierusalem, they toke braunches of palme trees, and wēte out to mete him, and cryed: Hosianna, $\$$ Blessed be he, that in the name of the LORDE commeth kynge of Israel. Iesus gat a yonge Asse, and rode theron, $A \mathrm{~s}$ it is wrytté: * * Feare not thou doughter of Sion, beholde, thy kynge eometh rydinge vpō an Asses foale. Neuertheles his disciples vnderstode not these thinges at the first, but whan Iesus was glorified, then remēbred they that soch thinges were wrytte of him, and that they had done soch thinges vnto him.

The they cast out, $\tau$ coulde nomore drawe it for $\mathfrak{y}$ multitude of fishes. The sayde $\dot{y}$ disciple ${ }^{\dagger}$ whō Iesus loued, vnto Peter: It is the LORDE.

Whan Simon Peter herde that it was the LORDE, he gyrde his mantell aboute him (for he was naked) and sprange in to $\mathfrak{y}$ see. But other disciples came by shippe (for they were not farre frō londe, but as it were two hundreth cubytes) and they drewe the net with the fiszhes. Now whan they were come to londe, they sawe coles layed, and fysh theron, and bred. Iesus sayde vnto the : ${ }^{\text {' }}$ Bringe hither of the fyshes, that ye haue taken now. Symon Peter stepped forth, and drew the nett to the londe, full of greate fyszhes, an hundreth and thre and fyftie. And for all there were so many, yet was not the net broken.

Iesus sayde vito them: Come, and dyne. $\mathbb{C}$ But none of the disciples durst ase him: Who art thou? For they knewe, that it was the LORDE. Then eame lesus, and toke $\dot{y}$ bred, and gaue it the: and the fyszhe likewyse. This is now the thirde tyme that lesus appeared vito his disciples, after that he was rysen agayne from the deed.

Now whà they had dyned, Iesus sayde vnto Symon Peter: Symō Iohāna, louest thou me more then these do? He sayde vnto him: Yee LORDE, thou knowest $\frac{\mathfrak{t}}{}$ I loue the. He sayde unto him: lede my lābes. He sayde vuto him agayne the seconde tyme: Symō Iohana, louest thou me? He sayde vnto him: Yee LORDE, thou knowest, $\frac{t}{y}$ I loue $\stackrel{\hat{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$. He sayde vnto him: Fede my shepe. He saide vnto him y thirde tyme: Symon Iohāna, louest thou me? Peter was sory, because he sayde vnto him, louest thou me? And he sayde vnto him: ${ }^{a}$ LORDE, thou knowest all thinges, thou knowest, that I loue $\frac{8}{9}$. Iesus sayde unto him : Fede my shepe.
D Verely verely I saye vnto the: Whan thou wast yoge, thou gerdedst thyselfe, and walkedst whither thou woldest. ${ }^{b}$ But wha thou art olde, thou shalt streteh forth thy handes, ${ }^{c}$ and another shal gyrde the, and lede the whither thou woldest not. But this he sayde, to signifye with what death he shulde glorifye God.

Whan he had spoken this, he sayde vnto him: Folowe me. P'eter turned him aboute, and sawe the disciple folowinge, whom Iesus loued, (*which also leaned vpō his brest at the supper, and sayde: LORDE, who is it that betrayeth the)? Whà Peter sawe him, he sayde vnto Iesus: LORDE, but what shal he do? lesus sayde vnto him: Yf I wil that he tary tyll I come, what is that to the? Folowe thou me. Then wente there out a sayenge amonge the brethren: This disciple dyeth not. And Iesus sayde not vinto him : He dyeth not, but: Yf I wil that he tary tyll I come, what is that to the? This is the same disciple, which testifyeth of these thinges, and wrote these thinges, and we knowe that his testimony is true.

There are many other thinges also that lesus dyd, which, yf they shulde be wrytte euery one, I suppose the worlde shulde not contayne the bokes, that were to be wrytten.

Tye first ©

THE first treatise (deare Theophilus) haue I made of all that Iesus beganne to do and to teache, vntyll $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ daye that he was taken vp, after that he (thorow the holy goost) had geuen commaundementes to the Apostles, whom he had chosen: to whō also he shewed himself ${ }^{a}$ alyue after his passion, by many tokes, and appeared vnto them fourtye dayes longe, and spake vnto them of the kyngdome of God.

And whan he had gathered them together, he commaunded them that they shulde not departe from Ierusalem, but to wayte for the promyse of the father, wherof (sayde he) ye haue herde ${ }^{b}$ of me :" For Ihon baptysed with water, but ye shalbe baptysed with $\dot{y}$ holy goost, © that within this few dayes.

Now whan they were come together, they axed him, and sayde: LORDE, shalt thou at this tyme set vp the kyngdome of Israel agayne? But he sayde vnto them: It belongeth not vnto you to knowe the ${ }^{c}$ tymes or seasons, which the father hath kepte in his awne power, but ye shal receaue the power of ${ }^{\circ}$ holy goost, ${ }^{d}$ which shal come vpon you, and ye shalbe my witnesses at Ierusalem, and in all Iewrye and Samaria, and vnto the ende of the earth.
3 And whan he had spoken these thinges, whyle they behelde, he was taken vp, and a ${ }^{\text {e }}$ cloude receaued him from their sight. And whyle they loked after him, as he wente in to heauen, beholde, there stode by them two men in whyte garmentes, which also sayde: Ye men of Galile, Why stonde ye gasynge vp [^1113]in to heauen? This Iesus which is take vp from you in to heauen ${ }^{+}$shal come euen so as ye haue sene him go in to heauen.

Then turned they agayne from $\dot{y}$ mount that is called Olinete, which is nye to Ierusalem, and hath a Sabbath dayes iourney. And whan they came in, they wente vp in to a parler, where abode ${ }^{f}$ Peter and Iames, Ihon and Andrew, Philippe and Thomas, Bartilmew and Mathew, lames the sonne of Alpheus, and Simon Zelotes, and Iudas the sonne of lames. These all contynued with one acorde in prayer and supplicacion, with the wemen and Mary the mother of Iesu and with his brethren

And in those dayes Peter stode vp in the myddes amonge the disciples, and sayde: (The company of the names together, was aboute an hundreth and twentye.) Ye men and brethren, this scripture must nedes be fulfylled, which y holy goost by the mouth of Dauid spake before of Iudas, which was a gyde of the that toke Iesus: $\ddagger$ for he was nombred with vs, and had opteyned the felashippe of this mynistracion. This same trulye possessed the $\&$ felde for the rewarde of vnrighteousnes, and hanged himself, and brast a sunder in the myddes, and all his bowels guszhed out. And it is knowne rnto all the that dwell at Ierusalem, in so moch that the same felde is called in their mother tonge Acheldema, that is to saye, the bloude felde.

For it is wrytten in the boke of psalmes: His habitacion be voyde, and noman be dwellinge therin. And: \| His biszhoprike another take. Wherfore amonge these men [^1114]'which haue bene gathered together with vs (all the tyme that the LORDE lesus wēte out and in amonge vs, begymynge from the baptyme of Thon, mityll $\hat{y}$ laye that he was take p p from vs) must one be a wytnesse with vs of his resurreccion.

And they appoynted two (Ioseph ${ }^{0}$ called Barsibas, whose syrname was lustus, and Nathias.) makinge their prayer and sayenge: Thou LORDE, ${ }^{6}$ which knowest the hertes of all men, shewe whether of these two thou hast chosen, that the one maye take the rowme of this mynistracion and Apostelshippe, from the which Iudas by transgression fell, that he might go awaye in to his awne place. And they gaue forth the lottes ouer them, and the lot fell yon Mathias. And he was counted with the eleuen Apostles.

A ND whan the * Whit sondaye was fulfylled, they were all with one acorde together in one place. And sodenly there came a sounde from heauen, as it had bene the comynge of a mightie wynde, and it fylled the whole house where they sat. And there appeared vinto them clouen tunges, like as they had bene of fyre. And he sat vpon ech one of them, and they were all fylled with the holy goost. $\dagger$ And they beganne to preach with other tunges, euen as the sprete gaue them vtteraunce.

There were dwellinge at Ierusalem Iewes, men that feared God, out of euery nacion that is vnder heauen. Now whan this voyce came to passe, the multitude came together, and were astōnyed: For euery one herde, that they spake with his awne tunge. They wondred all and marueyled, and sayde amonge them selues: Beholde, are not all these which speake, of Galile? How heare we thē euery one his awne tunge, wherin we were borne? Parthians and Medes, and Elamites, and we that dwell in Mesopotamia, and in Iewry and Capadocia, Pontus, and Asia, Phrigia and Pamphilia, Egipte, and in the partes of Lybia by Cyren, and straungers of Rome, lewes and $\ddagger$ Proselytes, Cretes and Arabians: we heare them speake with oure awne tunges the greate workes of God.

They were all amased, and wondred, and sayde one to another: What wil this be? But other mocked them, and sayde: They are full of swete wyne. Then stode Peter vp with the eleuen, and lift vp his voyce, and sayde vnto them:

Ye men of Iewry, and all ye that dwell at Ierusalē, be this knowne vnto you, and let my wordes entre in at youre eares. For these are not dronken, as ye suppose, for it is yet but the thirde houre of $\dot{y}$ daye: but this is it, that was spoke before by the prophet loel: And it shal come to passe in the last dayes, ${ }^{\text {c }}$, sayeth God, I will poure out of my sprete ypon all flesh, and youre sonnes and youre doughters shal prophecye, and youre yonge men ${ }^{d}$ shal se visions $\$$ and youre olde men shall dreame dreames, and on my seruauntes and on my handmaydens wyll I poure out of my sprete in those dayes, $\tau$ they shal prophecye.

And I wil shewe wonders in heauen aboue, and tokens on the earth beneth, ${ }^{\text {e }}$ bloude and fyre, and the rapoure of smoke. The Sonne shalbe turned in to darknesse, and the Moone in to bloude, before that greate and notable daye of the LORDE come. And it shall come to passe, $f$ Who so euer shal call ypo the name of the LORDE, shalbe saued.

Ye men of Israel, heare these wordes: Iesus of Nazareth, ỳ man approued of God amonge you with miracles, and wonders and tokens, which God dyd by him in the myddes amonge you, as ye youre selues knowe also, \| him (after that he was delyuered by the determinate councell and foreknowlege of God) haue ye taken by the handes of varighteous personnes, and crucifyed hin, a slayne him, who God hath raysed vp , ${ }^{\text {b }}$ and lowsed the sorowes of death, for so moch as it was vnpossyble that he shulde be holden of it. For Dauid speaketh of him: ${ }^{\text {A }} \mathrm{A}$ fore honde haue I set the LORDE allwayes before me, for he is on my right hōde, that I shulde not be moued. Therfore dyd my hert reioyse, and my tunge was glad: For my flesh also shal rest in hope. For thou shalt not leaue my soule in hell, nether shalt thou suffer thy Holy to se corrupcion. Thou hast shewed me the wayes of life, thon shalt make me full of ioye with thy countenaunce.

[^1115]Ye men and brethren, let me frely speake vnto you of the Patryarke Dauid: For he is deed and buried, ${ }^{a}$ and his sepulcre is with vs vnto this daye. Wherfore now seinge $\frac{\mathfrak{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ he was a prophet, and knewe that God had 20 promised him with an ooth, that the frute of his loynes shulde syt on his seate, ${ }^{b}$ he sawe it before, and spake of the resurreccion of Christ: for his soule was not left in hell, nether hath his flesh sene corrupcion. This Iesus hath God raysed vp, ' wherof we all are witnesses.

Seynge now that he by the right hande of God * is exalted, and hath receaued of $\hat{y}$ father $\hat{y}$ promyse of the holy goost, he hath shed forth this, that ye se and heare. For Dauid is not ascended in to heauen, but he sayde: The LORDE sayde vnto my LORDE: Syt thou on my righte hande, ${ }^{d}$ vntyll I make thine enemies thy fote stole. So therfore let allthe house of Israel knowe for a suertye, $\dot{y}$ God hath made this same lesus (whom ye haue crucified) LORDE and Christ.
${ }^{e}$ Whan they herde this, their hert pricked them, and they sayde vnto Peter and to the other Apostles: Ye men and brethre, + What shal we do? Peter sayde onto them: Amēde youre selues, and let euery one of you be baptysed in the name of Iesus Christ, for the remyssion of symnes, and ye shal receaue the gifte of the holy goost. For this $\ddagger$ promyse was made vnto you and youre children, and to all that are farre of, who so euer the LORDE oure God shal call. And with many other wordes bare he witnesse, and exorted them, and sayde: Saue youre selues from this vntowarde generacion. They that gladly receaued his preachnge, were baptysed, it the same daye there were added vinto them aboute thre thousande soules.

They contynued in the Apostles doctryne, and in the felashippe, and in breakynge of bred, and in prayer. And feare came vpö euery soule, and many wonders and tokens were done by if Apostles. But all they that beleued, were together, ${ }^{f}$ and had all thinges commen. They solde their goodes and possessions, and parted them out amonge all, acordinge as euery mā had nede. And they contynued daylie with one acorde in the tēple, and $ brake bred in euery house: they toke

PETER and Thon wente vp together in to $\alpha$ the temple aboute the nyenth houre to praye. And there was a certayne man halt from his mothers wombe, whon they brought and layed daylie at the gate of the teple, which is called, the Bewtyfull, that he might axe almesse of them that wēte in to the temple. Now whan he sawe Peter and Ihon, that they wolde in to the temple, he desyred to receane an almesse. Peter behelde him with Ihon, and sayde: Loke on vs. And he gaue hede monto them, hopynge to receaue some thinge of them. Immediatly his legges a ancle bones were made strōge, and he sprange, stode and walked, and entred with them in to the teple, walkynge, and leapinge and praysinge God.

And all the people sawe him walke and prayse God. And they knewe him, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ it was he, which sat for almesse at the bewtyfull gate of the temple. And they were fylled with wondrynge, and were astonnyed at that, which had happened vito hì. But as this halt which was healed helde him to Peter and Ihon, all the people ranne vnto them in to the porche, which is called Salomos, and wondred.

Whan Peter sawe that, he answered vnto the people: Ye men of Israel, why maruayle ye at this, or why loke ye so at vs, as though we by oure awne power or deseruynge, had made this man to walke? The God of Abraham and of Isaac, and of Iacob, $\mathrm{g}_{\mathrm{y}}$ God of oure fathers hath glorifyed his childe Iesus, whom ye delyuered and denyed in the presence of Pilate, whan he had iudged him to be lowsed. Thou hast not lyed vnto mē, but vnto God. Whan Ananias herde these wordes, he fell downe, a gane vp the goost. And there came a greate feare vpon all the that herde of this. The yonge men rose vp , and put him asyde, and caried him out, and buried him.

And it fortuned as it were aboute $y$ space of thre houres after, his wife came in, and knewe not what was done. But Peter answered vnto her. Tell me, solde ye the londe for somoch? She sayde: Yee, for so moch. Peter sayde vito her: Why haue ye agreed together, to tempte the sprete of the LORDE? Beholde, the fete of the which haue buried thy huszbande, are at the dore, a shal carye the out. And immediatly she fell downe at his fete, and gaue vp the goost. Then came in the yonge men, and founde her deed, and caried her out, and buried her by hir huszbāde. And there came a greate feare ouer the whole congregacion, and ouer all the that herde it.

Many tokens and wonders were done amonge the people by the hades of the A postles (and they were all together with one acorde in * Salomons porche: but of other there durst no man ioyne him self vito thé, neuertheles the people helde moch of them. The multitude of the men and wemen that beleued in the LORDE, grewe more and more) In so moch that they brought out the sycke in to the stretes, and layed them vpon beddes and barowes, that at the leest waye the shadowe of Peter (whan he came by) might ouershadowe some of thẽ. There came many also out of y cities rounde aboute vnto Ierusalem, and brought the sicke and the that were vexed with vncleane spretes, and they were healed euery one.

But the hye prest rose vp , and all they $\mathrm{y}^{\frac{t}{y}}$ were with him, "which is the secte of the Saduces, and were full of indignacion, a layed handes on the Apostles, and put them in the comon preson. But the angell of y LORDE ${ }^{c}$

[^1119]by night opened the preson dores, and brought the out, and sayde: Go youre waye and steppe yp, and speake in the temple to the people all the wordes of this life. Whan they herde that, they entred in to the temple early in the mornynge : and taught.

But the hye prest came, and they y were with him, and called the councell together, $\tau$ all $y$ Ehters of the children of Israel, and sent to the preson to fet them. The mynisters came and founde them not in the preson, came agayne, and tokle, and sayde: The preson foninde we shut with all diligence, and the kepers stondinge without before the dores: but whit we had opened, we founde noman therin. Whan the hye prest, and the rulers of the temple and the other hye prestes herde these wordes, they douted of them, wher vato this wolle growe.

Then came there one, which tolde them: Beholle, the men that ye put in preson, are in the temple, stondinge and teachinge the people. Then wete $y$ rulers with their mynisters, and fetehed them without violence: * for they feared the people, lest they shulde haue bene stoned. And whan they had brought them, they set the before the comncell. And the hye prest axed them, and sayde: Dyd not we ${ }^{+}$cōmaunde you strately, that ye shulde not teache in this name. And beholde, ye haue fylled Ierusalem with youre doctryne, ${ }^{,}$and ye intede to brynge this mans bloude upon vs.

But Peter and the Apostles answered, and sayde: We ought more to obeye God then men. The God of oure fathers hath raysed yp Iesus, who ye slewe, and hanged on tre. Him hath the righte hande of God exalterl, to be a prynce and Sauioure, to geue repentaunce and forgeuenesse of synnes vato Israel. And we are his recordes of these wordes, and the holy goost, whō God hath geuen vnto the that obeye him. Whā they herde that, it wente thorow the hertes of them, and they thoughte to slaye them.
Then stode there $p$ in $\dot{y}$ councell a pharyse, ${ }^{b}$ named Gamaliel, a seribe, had in greate reputacion before all y people, and bad put the Apostles asyde a litle, and sayde vnto them: Ye men of Israel, take hede to youre selues, what ye do as touchinge these men.

[^1120]Before these dayes rose vp , one Thendas, boostinge himself. (And there cleued noto him a nōbre of $m \bar{e}$, aboute a foure hundreth) which was slayne, and all they $\frac{t}{y}$ enclyned vnto him, were scatred abrode, and brought to naught. "After this stode vp Iudas of Galile in $\dot{y}$ dayes of trybute, and drewe awaye moch people after him, © he also perished, a all they that enclyned vnto him, are seatred abrode. And now I saye mito you: refrayne youre selues frō these men, and let the go. $\ddagger$ If this councell or worke be of mé, it wil come to naught: but yf it be of God, ye are not able to destroye it, lest ye be founde to be the men, that wil stryue agaynst God. Then they agreed vnto him, and called the Apostles, and bet them, and commaunded them, that they shulde speake nothinge in the name of Iesu, and let them go.

But they departed from the presence of the councell, reioysinge, ${ }^{d}$ that they were worthy to suffre rebuke for his names sake. And daylie in the temple and in euery house they ceassed not, to teache and to preache the Gospell of Iesus Christ.

IN those dayes whan the nombre of the disciples increased, there arose a grudge amoge the Grekes agaynst the Hebrues, because their wyddowes were not loked vpon in the daylie handreachinge. Then the twolue called the multitude of the disciples together, and sayde: It is not mete that we shulde leaue the worde of God, and to serue at the tables. Wherfore brethren, loke out amonge you seuè men, $\}$ that are of honeste reporte, and full of the holy goost and wyszdome, whom we maye appoynte to this nedefull busynes. But we wil gene oure selues unto prayer, and to the mynistracion of the worde of God. And the sayenge pleased the whole multitude. And they chose Steuen, a man full of fayth and of the holy goost, and Philippe, and Procorus, and Nieanor, and Thimon, and Parmenas, and Nicolas the Proselite of Antioche. \|These they set before ${ }^{\circ}$ Apostles, and they prayed, and layed their handes vpon them. And the worde of God increased, and the nombre of the disciples multiplied greatly at Ierusalem.

[^1121]And there were many prestes also obedient vnto the fayth.

Steuen full of faith and power, dyd wonders and greate tokens amonge the people. And they moued the people, and the Elders and the scrybes, and came ypon him, a caught him, and brought him before the councell, and set false witnesses there, which sayde: This man ceasseth not to speake blasphemous wordes agaynst this holy place and the lawe. For we herde him saye: Iesus of Nazareth shall destroye this place, and chaunge the ordinaunces which Moses gaue rs. And all they that sat in the councell, loked vpō him and sawe his face as the face of an angell.

${ }^{3} \mathrm{~T}$HEN sayde the hye prest: Is it euē so? He sayde: Deare brethren and fathers, herken to, The God of glorye appeared unto oure father Abrahā, whyle he was yet in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Haran, and sayde vnto him: Get ${ }^{\circ}$ out of thy countre, and fro thy kynred, and come in to a londe which I wil shewe $\dot{y}$. The wente he out of the lande of the Caldees, ${ }^{b}$ and dwelt in Haran. +And from thēce, whan his father was deed, he brought him ouer in to this Ionde (where ye dwell now) and gave hin no enheritaūce therin, no not y bredth of a fote: and promysed him, that he wolde geue it him to possesse, ${ }^{c}$ and to his sede after him, whan as yet he had no childe.
${ }^{d}$ But thus sayde God vnto him: Thy sede shalbe a straunger in a straunge londe, and they shal make bonde men of them, and intreate thē euell foure hundreth yeares: and $\bar{y}$ people whom they shal serue, wil I iudge, sayde God. And after that shal they go forth, and serue me in this place. And he gaue him the couenaūt of circuicision. ${ }^{c}$ And he begat Isaac, ${ }^{f}$ and circūcised him the eight daye. And Isaac begat Iacob $\ddagger$ and lacob begat the twolue Patriarkes.

And the Patriarkes had indignacion at loseph, ${ }^{8}$ and solde hī in to Egipte. And God was with him, and delyuered him out of all his troubles, and gaue him fauoure ad wyszdome it the sight of Pharac kynge of Egipte §which made him prynce ouer Egipte and ouer all his house.
"But there came a derth ouer all the londe of Egipte and Canaan, and a greate trouble, and oure fathers founde no sustenaunce. But Iacob herde that there was corne in Egipte, and sent oure fathers out the first tyme. \| And at the seconde tyme was Ioseph knowne of his brethren, and Iosephs kynred was made knowne snto Pharao. But Ioseph sent out, and caused his father and all his kynred to be broughte, eue thre score and fyftene soules. ${ }^{\text {i }}$ And Iacob wente downe in to Egipte, and dyed, both he and oure fathers ${ }^{9}$ and were brought ouer unto Sichē, and layed in the sepulcre, ${ }^{1}$ that Abrahan boughte for money of the children of Hemor at Sichem.
'Now whā the tyme of the promes drue nye (which God had sworne monto Abrahā) the people grewe and multiplied in Egipte, tyll there rose another kynge, which knewe not of Ioseph. The same dealte suttely with oure kynred, and intreated oure fathers euell and made them to cast out the yonge children, that they shulde not remayne alyue.
${ }^{m}$ At the same tyme was Moses borne, and was a proper childe before God, and was norished thre monethes in his fathers house. But whan he was cast out, Pharaos doughter toke him vp, and norished him up for hir awne sonne. And Moses was learned in all maner wyszlome of the Egipcians, and was mightie in dedes $\pi$ wordes.

But whan he was fourtye yeare olde, it came in to his mynde to ryset his brethren the children of Israel. And whan he sawe one of them suffre wroge, he helped him, and delyuered him, that had the harme done mnto him, and slewe the Egipcian. But he thoughte that his brethren shulde haue [^1122]monderstonde, how that God by his hande shulde saue the $\overline{\text {, h }}$ howbeit they vaderstode it not.

D And on the nexte daye he shewed himself vnto them as they strone together, and wolde haue set them at one agayne, and sayde: Syrs, ye are brethren, why hurte ye one another? But he that dyd his neghboure wronge, thrust him awaye, and sayde: ${ }^{a}$ Who made the a ruler and iudge ouer vs? Wilt thou slaye me also, as thou slewest the Egipcian yesterdaye? But Moses fled at that sayenge, and was a straunger in the lande of Madian, where he begat two sonnes.
${ }^{b}$ And after fourtye yeares, the angell of $\dot{y}$ LORDE appeared vito him vpon mount Sina, in a flamme of fyre in a buszhe. Whà Moses save it, he wondred at the sighte. But as he true nye to beholde, $\dot{y}$ voyce of $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ LORDE came vnto him: I am the God of thy fathers, the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the Gorl of Jacob. Howbeit Moses trēbled, and durst not beholde. But $\stackrel{\AA}{y}$ LORDE sayde vnto hī: *Put of thy shues from thy fete, for $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ place where thou stondest, is an holy grounde. I haue well sene the trouble of my people in Egipte, and haue herde their gronynge, and am come downe to delyuer them. And now come, I wil sende the in to Egipte.

This Moses, whom they refused, and sayde: ${ }^{c}$ Who made $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ a ruler and iudge ouer vs? him had God sent to be a ruler a delynerer by the hande of the angell, that appeared vnto him in the buszhe. Oure fathers had the tabernacle of witnesse in $\hat{y}$ wyldernesse, like as he appoynted them, §whan he spake vnto Moses, that he shulde make it (acordinge to the patrone, $\dot{y}$ he had sene.) which oure fathers also receaued, and brought it with Iosue in to the londe that the ${ }^{5}$ Heythē had in possession, whom God droue out before the face of oure fathers, vntyll the tyme of Dauid, which founde fauoure with God, and desyred that he might fynde a tabernacle for the God of Iacob.

But Salomon buylte hī an house. \|Howbeit $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ Hyest of all dwelleth not in temples that are made with handes: As he sayeth by the prophete: " Heauē is my seate, and the earth is my fote stole. 9AUL had pleasure in his death. At $\dot{y}$ same tyme there was a greate persecucion ouer the congregacion at Ierusate. And they were all scatered abrode in the regions of Iewrye © Samaria, excepte the Apostles. As for Stenen, men $\stackrel{t}{\mathrm{t}}$ feared God dressed him, and made greate lamentacion ouer him. ${ }^{b}$ But Saul made hauocke of the congregacion, entred in to euery house, and drue out men a wemen, d delyuered thē to preson. They now $\dot{y}$ were scatered abrode wēte aboute a preached the worde. The came Philippe in to a cite of Samaria, and preached Christ vnto them. And the people gaue hede with one acorde unto $\dot{y}$ thinges that Philip spake, hearinge him, and seynge the tokes that he dyd. For the vncleane spretes cryed loude, and departed out of many $\frac{t}{y}$ were possessed. And many that were sicke of the palsie and lame, were healed. And there was greate ioye in the same cite.

But afore there was in $\mathfrak{y}$ same cite a certayne mā, called Simon, which vsed witche craft, and bewitched $\hat{y}$ people of Samaria, sayenge, that he was a man which coulde do greate thinges. And they all regarded him from the leest vuto $\mathfrak{y}$ greatest, $\mathbb{\imath}$ sayde: This is the power of God which is greate. But they regarded him, because that of longe tyme he had bewitched them with his sorcery.
© Howbeit whan they beleued Philips preachinge of $y$ kyngdome of God, and of the name of Iesu Christ, they were baptysed both mee t wemē. Then Symon himself beleued also, [^1125]and was baptysed, and clened vnto Philippe. And whā he sawe the dedes and tokens that were done, he wondred.

Whan the Apostles which were at Iernsalem, herde, that Samaria had receaued $\dot{y}$ worde of God, they sent vnto the Peter and Ihon. Which, whà they were come, prayed for thē, $\frac{\mathrm{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ they might receaue the holy goost. For as yet he was come rpon none of them but they were baptysed onely in the name of Christ Iesu. $\ddagger$ Then layed they their hādes on them, and they receaued the holy goost.

But whan Simon sawe, that by the layenge on of the Apostles hādes $\hat{y}$ holy goost was geuen, be offred the money, and sayde: Geue me also this power, that, on whomsoeuer I put the hōdes, he maye receaue the holy goost. Thou shalt have nether parte ner felashipe in this worde, for thy hert is not righte before God. Repente therfore of this thy wickednesse, and praye vato God, yf happly the thought of thy hert maye be forgeuē y. For I se, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ thou art full of bytter gall, and wrapped in with mrighteonsnesse.

Then answered Simon, a sayde: \|Praye a ye vnto the LORDE for me, ${ }^{t}$ y none of these thinges wherof ye hane spoken, come rpon me. And they, wha they had testified and spoke the worde of the LORDE, turned agayne to Ierusalem, and preached the Gospell in many townes of the Samaritanes.

But the angell of the LORDE spake vnto Philippe, and sayde: Aryse, a go towarde the South, vnto the waye that goeth downe from Ierusalem vnto Gaza, which is deserte. And be rose, and wente on. And beholde, a mā of the Morians lōde (a chamberlayne and of auctorite with Candace $y$ quene of the londe of the Morians) which had the rule of all hir treasuries, y same came to Ierusale to worshipe. Then answered the chamberlayne vnto Philippe, and sayde: I praye the, of whom speaketh the prophet this? of himselfe, or of some other man?

Plilippe opened his mouth, and beganne at this scripture, and preached him the Gospell of Iesus. And as they wēte on their waye, they came to a water. And the chamberlayne sayde: Beholde, here is water, what hyndereth me to be baptysed? Philippe sayde: If thou beleue from thy whole herte, thou mayest. He answered, and sayde: I belene, that lesus Christ is the sonne of God. And he commaunded to holde styll the charet, and they wente downe in to the water, both Philippe and the chamberlayne.  AUL was yet breathinge out threatnynges and slanghter ${ }^{a}$ agaynst the diseiples of the LORDE. And wente vnto ${ }^{\circ}$ hye preste, and desyred of him letters to Damascon vilto the synagoges, that yf he foude eny of this waye (whether they were men or wemen) he mighte brynge the bounde vnto Ierusalem. And as he was goinge on his iourney, it fortuned, that he came nye vnto Damaseō, and sodenly there shyned rounde aboute hī a light frō heaué, and he fell to the earth, and herde a voyce, which sayde vnto him: Saul Saul ${ }^{+}$why persecutest thou me? He sayde: LORDE, who art thou? The LORDE sayde: I am Iesus, whō thou persecutest. It shalbe harde for $\stackrel{\dot{y}}{ }$ to kycke agaynst the prycke. And he both tremblinge and as-[^1126]tonnyed, sayte: LORDE $\ddagger$ what wilt thou that I shal do? The LORDE sayde vnto him: Aryse, and go in to the cite, there shal it be tolde the what thou shalt do.

As for $\hat{y}^{8}$ me that iourneyed with him, they stode and were amased: for they herde a voyce, but sawe noman. Saul rose from the earth, and whan he had opened his eyes, he sawe noman. Neuertheles they toke him by the honde, $\tau$ broughte him to Damascō: and he was thre dayes without sighte, and nether ate ner dranke. At Damascon there was a disciple named Ananias, and vnto him sayde the LORDE in a vision: Ananias And he sayde: beholde, here am I LORDE. The LORDE sayde vnto him: Aryse, and go in to the strete which is called straight, and axe in the house of Iuda after one called Saul of §Tharsis: for beholde, he prayeth, a hath sene in a vision a mā named Ananias cōnynge vnto him, t layenge the hāde rpō him, that he mighte receaue his sighte.

Ananias answered: LORDE, I haue herde by many of this man, how moch euell he hath done to thy sayntes at Ierusalē. And here hath he auctorite of the hye prestes, to bynde all those $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ call vpon thy name. The LORDE sayde vnto him: Go thy waye, il for this man is a chosen vessell vnto me, that he maye beare my name before the Heythen, and before kynges, and before the children of Israel. I wil shewe him, how greate thinges he must suffre for my names sake.

And Ananias wente his waye, and came in to the house, ${ }^{\text {b }}$ and layed the handes vpon him, and sayde : Brother Saul, the LORDE which appeared into $\dot{y}$ in the waye as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receaue thy sight, and be fylled with the holy goost. And immediatly there fell from his eyes as it had bene scales, and he receaued his sighte, and rose, and was baptysed, and toke meate, and was conforted.

Then was Saul a certayne dayes with the diseiples that were at Damaseon. And straight waye he preached Christ in the synagoges, how that he was y sonne of God. But all they that herde him, were amased, and sayde: Is not this he, which at lerusalem spoyled all those that called on his name? and came hither to the intent that he shulde brynge them bounde rnto the hye prestes? But Saul increased in strength, a cōfounded $\dot{y}$ Iewes which dwelt at Damaseon, and affirmed $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ this was very Christ.

And after many dayes the Iewes helde a councell together to kyll him. But it was tolde Saul, that they layed wayte for him. ${ }^{a}$ And they wayted at y gates daye a night, that they might kyll him. *Then the disciples toke him by nighte, a put him thorow the wall, and let him downe in a baskett.
${ }^{6}$ But whan Saul came to Ierusalem, he assayed to ioyne himself to f disciples. And they were all afrayed of him, and beleued not, $\frac{\dot{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ he was a disciple. Neuertheles Barnabas toke him, and broughte him to the Apostles, and tolde them how he had sene the LORDE in the waye, and how he spake to him, a how he had done boldly at Damascon in the name of Iesu. And he was with them, and wente out and in at Ierusale, and quyte him selfe boldty in $y$ name of y LORDE Iesu. He spake also, and disputed with $\mathfrak{y}$ Grekes. But they wéte aboute to slaye him. Whan the brethren knewe $\frac{t}{y}$, ${ }^{6}$ they brought him to Cesarea, and sent him forth to Tharsis. So the eongregacions had rest thorow out all Iewry, and Galile, and Samaria, a were edified, and walked in the feare of the LORDE, and were fylled with the comforte of the holy goost.
It chaunced that as Peter walked thorow all quarters, he came also vnto $\dot{y}$ sayntes which dwelt at Lydda. There founde he a man named Eneas, which had lyen vpon his bedd eight yeares sicke of $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ palsye. And Peter sayde vuto him: Eneas, Iesus Christ make the whole, aryse, and make thy bedd for thy self. And he arose immediatly. And all they that dwelt at Lydda and at Sarona, sawe him, and turned vnto the LORDE.

At Ioppa there was a certayne woman that was a disciple, named Tabitha, which by interpretacion is called Doreas: $\dot{y}$ same was full of good workes and almesse dedes, which she dyd. But it chaunced at the same tyme, that she was sieke, and dyed. Then waszhed they her, and layed her in a chäber. But for so moch as Lydda was nye vnto Ioppa, and the disciples herde that Peter was there, they sent two men vito him, and desyred [^1128]him, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ he wolde take it for no grefe to come vnto them.

Peter rose, and came with thē. And whā he was come, they broughte him in to the chamber, and all the wyddowes stode rounde aboute him, wepynge, and shewed him the cotes and garmētes, which Doreas made whyle she was with them. And whī Peter had put them all forth, he kneled downe, made his prayer, and turned him vnto the body, and sayde: Tabitha, ryse tp. And she opened hir eyes: and whan she sawe Peter ${ }^{\dagger}$ she sat hir downe agayne. But he gaue her the hande, and lifte her rp, and called the sayntes and the wedowes, and shewed her there alyue. And it was knowne thorow out all Ioppa, $\pi$ many beleued on $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ LORDE. And it fortuned, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ he taried a loge season at Ioppa by one Simè, which was a tanner.

THERE was a man at Cesarea, named Cornelins (a captayne of $\dot{y}$ coppany, which is called y Italianysh) a deuoute man, a one that feared God with all his house, a gaue moch almesse to $\dot{y}$ people, and prayed God allwaye. The same sawe in a vision openly (aboute the nyenth houre of the daye) an angell of God entringe in to him, and sayenge vato hins: Cornelius. He loked ypon him, and was afrayed, and sayde: LORDE, what is it? He sayde vnto him: $\ddagger$ Thy prayers t thine allmesses are come vp in to remébraunce before God. And now sende men unto Ioppa, $\pi$ eall for simō, whose syrname is Peter, which is at lodginge with one Symon a tanner, whose house lyeth by $\mathfrak{y}$ see syde: he shal tell $\dot{y}$, what thou oughtest to do. And wha the angell which spake to Cornelius, was departed, he called two of his housholde scruauntes, a a deuoute soudyer, of the that wayted von him: and tolde them all, and sent the to Ioppa.

On the nexte daye after whan these were goinge on their ionmey, and came nye vnto the eite, Peter \& wente rp in to a chamber to praye aboute the sixte houre. And whan he was högrie, he wolde haue eate. But whyle they made ready for him, he fell in to a traunce, and sawe heaue open, and a vessell comynge downe vito him, as it had bene a greate lyme clothe, knytt at the foure corners, and was let downe to y earth, wherin were all maner of foure foted beestes of the earth, a wylle beestes, and wormes, and fonles of the ayre. And there came a voyce vito him: Ryse Peter, slaye, a eate. But Peter sayde: Oh no, LORDE, * for I netuer ate eny commen or vncleane thinge. And the voyce spake nuto lim agayne $\mathrm{y}_{\mathrm{t}}$ secōde tyme : + What God hath clensed, y make not thou vucleane. This was done thryse. And y vessell was receaned rp agayne in to heanen.

But whyle Peter was combred in him selfe, what maner of vision this shulde be which he had sene, behokle, the men $\frac{t}{y}$ were sent from Cornelins, enquered after Simos house, and stode hefore the dore, and called, and axed whether Simon (whose syrname was Peter) were lodged there. Whyle Peter was musinge of the vision, the sprete sayde vnto him: beholle, the men seke the. Aryse therfore, and get the downe, a go with the , and doute not, for I haue sent them.

Then wente Peter downe to the men, $\frac{t}{y}$ were sent unto him from Cornelius, and sayde: lo, I an he whom ye seke: what is $\hat{y}$ cause, wherfore ye are come? They sayde: Cornelius the captayne, a iust man and one that feareth God, and of good reporte amōge all the people of the Iewes, was warned by an holy angell, to sende for the in to his house, and to heare wordes of the. $\ddagger$ Then called he them in, and lodged them.

The nexte daye after wente Peter forth with them, and certayne brethren of loppa bare him company. And $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ daye folowinge came they to Cesarea. Cornelius wayted for the , and had called together his kynszfolkes and speciall frendes. And as it channced ${ }^{t}$ Peter came in, Cornelins mett him, and fell downe at his fete, a worshipped him. But Peter toke him vp, and sayde: \$ Stonde yp, 1 am a man also. And as he talked with him, he wente in, and founde many that were come together, and he sayde vuto them: Ye knowe, that it is not laufull for a man begnge a lewe ${ }^{a}$ to ioyne him selfe or to come to a straunger. But God hath shewed me, $\frac{t}{y}$ I shulde call no mit comen or vucleane. Therfore haue I not douted to come, as soone as I was sent for.

[^1129]I axe you therfore, for what intent haue ye sent for me?

Cornelius sayde: It is now foure dayes agoo, then fasted I, and at the nyenth houre I prayed in my house, and beholde, there stode a mā before me in a bryghte clothinge, and sayde: Cornelius, thy prayer is herde, and thine allmesse dedes are had in remebraunce in the sighte of God. Sende therfore to Ioppa, and call for one Simon (whose syrname is Peter) which is at lodginge in $\hat{y}$ house of Simon $\hat{y}^{n}$ tāner, by the see syde: $\hat{y}$ same whi he commeth, shal speake vnto $\dot{y}$. Then sent I vnto the immediatly, and thou hast done well, that thou art come. Now are we all here presente before God, to heare all thinges that are commaunded the of God.
leter opened his mouth, a sayde: ${ }^{b}$ Now perceaue I of a trueth, that God hath no respecte of personnes, $\|$ but in all people he $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ feareth him, and worketh righteousnes, is accepted into him. Ye knowe of y preachinge that God sent vnto the children of Israel, preachinge thorow Iesus Christ (which is LORDE oner all) which preachinge was published thorow out all Iewry, $\uparrow$ and begāne in Galile after $\hat{y}$ baptyme that Ihon preached, how God  anoynted the same lesus of Nazareth with the holy goost and with power, which wente aboute, a dyd good, and healed all those that were oppressed of the deuell, for God was with him. THE Apostles and the brethren that were in Iewrye, herde saye, that the Heythen also had receaued the worde of God. And whan Peter was come vp to Ierusalem, they that were of the circucision, chode with him, and sayde: * Thou wentest in to men that are vncircumcysed, and hast eaten with them. But Peter beganne, and expounded the thinge in order vnto the and sayde: I was in $\hat{y}$ cite of Ioppa prayēge, ${ }^{b}$ and in a traunce I sawe a vision, a vessell commynge downe, as it had bene a greate lynnen clothe with foure corners, and let downe from heauen, and came vnto me. And I herde a voyce, which sayde vnto me: Ryse Peter, slaye, a eate. But I sayde: Oh no, LORDE, for there neuer entred eny commen or vncleane thinge in to my mouth. Neuertheles the voyce answered me agayne from heauen: What God hath clensed, that call not thou vncleane. This was done thre tymes, and all was taken vp agayne in to heauen.

And beholde, immediatly stode there thre men before the dore of the house that I was in, sent from Cesarea vnto me. But the sprete sayde vato me, that I shulde go with the and doute nothinge. 'These sixe brethrē also came with me, and we entred in to the mās house.

And he shewed vs, how he had sene an angell stondinge in his house, which sayde vnto him: Sende men to Ioppa, and call for Simon (whose syrname is Peter) he shall tell y wordes, wherby thou and all thy house shal be saued. But whan I beganne to speake,

For as moch then as God hath geuen them like giftes, as vato vs, which beleue on the LORDE Iesus Christ, who was I, that I shulde be able to withstōde God? Whan they herde this, they helde their peace, and praysed God, and sayde: Then hath God also to the Heithen graunted repentaunce mnto life.
${ }^{d}$ They that were scatred abrode thorow $\dot{y}$ trouble y rose aboute Steuen, walked on euery syde rntyll Phenices, and Cipers, and Antioche, and spake the worde vnto noman but onely vnto $\dot{y}$ Iewes. Neuertheles some of the were men of Cipers and Cyren, which came to Antioche, and spake also vnto the Grekes, a preached the Gospell of the LORDE Iesu. And $\hat{y}$ hande of the LORDE was with the. And a greate nombre heleued, and turned vnto the LORDE.

This tydinges of them came to $\dot{y}$ eares of the cogregacion at Ierusalem. And they sent Barnabas, that he shulde go vnto Antioche. Which whan he was come thither, a sawe the grace of God, he was glad, sand exorted them all, that with purpose of hert they wolde contynue in the LORDE. For he was a good man, full of the holy goost and faith. And there was a greate multitude of people added vuto the LORDE. But Barnabas departed vnto Tharsus, to seke Saul. And whà he had foūde hī, he brought hi to Anthioche. It chaūced, that a whole yeare they were there conuersaunte together in the cogregaciō, a taughte moch people, so that the disciples at Antioche were first called Christen.

In those dayes came there prophetes fro Ierusalem vnto Antioche. And one of them (whose name was II Agabus) stode vp, and declared by the sprete a greate derth, that shulde come ouer the whole compasse of the earth: which came to passe vnder the Emperoure Claudins. But the disciples concluded (euery one acordinge to his abylite) to sendef an handreachinge vnto $\dot{y}$ brethren that were in Iewry: which thinge they also dyd, and sent it by the handes of Barnabas and Saul.

A'I' the same tyme layed kynge Herode handes vpon certayne of the congregation, to vexe them. As for * lames the brother of Ihon, him he slewe with the swerde. And whan he sawe that it pleased the lewes, he proceaded farther to take Peter also. But it was laster. Now whan he had taken him, he put him in preson, and delyuered him vnto foure quatermions of sondyers, to kepe him: and thonght after Easter to bringe him forth to the people. And Peter was kepte in the preson. + But prayer was made without ceassinge of the congregacion, vnto God for him. Aud whan Herode wolde haue broughte him out vito the people, in the same nighte slepte P'eter betwene two soudiers, bounde with two cheynes. And the kepers before the dore kepte the preson.
And beholde, the angell of the LORDE was there presente, and a lighte shyned in the habitacion, and he smote Peter on the syde, and waked him vp, and sayde: Aryse vp quyckly. And the cheynes fell of from his hondes. And the angell sayde vnto him: Gyrde the, and put on thy shues. And he dyd so. And he sayde vnto him: Cast thy mantle aboute the, and folowe me. And he wente out, and folowed him, and wyst not, that it was trueth that was done by $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ angell, but thoughte he had sene a vision. Neuertheles they wente thorow the first and seconde watch, and came to the yron gate, that ledeth vnto the cite, which opened to the by his awne acorde. And they wente out, and passed thorow one strete, and immediatly the angell departed from him.
And whan Peter was come to himself, he sayde: Now 1 knowe of a trueth, that $\dot{y}$ LORDE hath sent his angell, and delyuered me out of the honde of Herode, and from all the waytinge for of the people of the lewes. And as he considered the thinge, he came to the house of Mary the mother of one lhon, (which after his syrname was called Marke) where many were gathered together, $\ddagger$ and prayed. As Peter knocked at the entry dore, there came forth a damsell to herken, named Rhoda. And whan she knewe Peters voyce, she opened not the entrye for gladnes, but rane in, and tolde, that Peter stode before $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$

[^1131]entrye. But they sayde vuto her: Thou art mad. Neuertheles she abode by it, that is was so. They sayde: it is his angell. But Peter contynued knockinge. Whan they opened the dore, they sawe him, and were astomyyed. § But he beckened vnto them with the hande, to holde their peace, a tolde them, how the LORDE had broughte him out of the preson. And he sayde: Shewe this vnto Iames, and to the brethren. And he departed, and wète in to another place.

Whan it was daye, there was not a litle a 1 B doo amoge the soudyers, what was become of Peter. Whan Herode had called for him, and founde him not, he caused the kepers to be examyned, and commaunded the to be caried awaye, and he wente downe frō lewry vnto Cesarea, and there abode. But he was displeased with them of Tyre and Sidō. Neuertheles they came vnto him with one accorde, and made intercession to Blastus the kynges chamberlayne, and desyred peace, because their countre was norished by the kynges londe. But vpon a daye appoynted, Herode put on y kyngly apparell, sat him downe vpon the iudgment seate, and made an oracion mito them. As for the people, they cried therto: This is a voyce of God, and not of a man. Immediatly the angell of the LORDE smote him, because he gaue not God the honoure : And he was eaten vp of wormes, ${ }^{a}$ and gaue up the goost. But the worde of God grewe, and multiplyed. As for Barnabas and Saul, they came agayne to Ierusalem, and delyuered ill the handreachinge, and toke with them Ihon. whose syrname was Marke.

Then rose there vp certayne of the secte of $\dot{y}$ Pharises (which beleued) and sayde: They must be circumcysed and comaunded, to kepe the lawe of Moses. But the Apostles and Elders came together, to reason vpon this matter.

Now whan there was moch disputinge Peter rose vp , and sayde vito thẽ: Ye men and brethren, ye knowe that a good whyle agoo, God chose amonge rs, $\frac{t}{y}$ the Heythè by my mouth shulde heare the worde of the Gospell, and beleuc. And God the knower of hertes bare wytnesse ouer thē,ll and gaue the the holy goost, like as vin to vs, © put no dyfference betwixte vs a them, and purified their hertes thorow fayth. Now therfore why tempte ye God, with layenge vpon $\dot{y}$ disciples neckes the yocke, ${ }^{4}$ which nether oure fathers ner we were able to beare? But we beleue to be saued thorow the grace ${ }^{c}$ of the LORDE Iesu Christ, like as they also. Then all y multitude helde their peace, and gaue audience vnto Paul and Barnabas, which tolde how greate tokens and wonders God had done by thē amōge the Heythen. Afterwarde whan they helde their peace, lames answered, and sayde: Ye men and brethren, herkē vnto me, Simō hath tolde, how God at the first vysited to receaue a people vnto his name from amonge the Heythen. And vato this agree $\dot{y}$ wordes of the prophetes, as it is wrytte: ${ }^{d}$ After this wyl I returne and wyl buylde agayne $\dot{y}$ tabernacle of Dauid, that is fallen downe, and that which is fallen in decaye therof, wyl I buylde agayne, and wyl set it vp, that the residue of men maye seke after the LORDE: a also the Heythen vpo whom my name is named, sayeth the LORDE, which doth all these thinges. Knowne vuto God are all his workes from the begynnynge of $y$ worlde. Wherfore my sentence is, that they which from amonge the Heythen are turned vnto (iond, be not disquyeted, but to wryte nuto them, that they absterne them selues from fylthyuesse of * ldols, from + whordome, and from : strangled, and bloude. For Moses hath of olde tyme in ewery cite them that preach him: and he is red in the synagoges euery Sabbath daye.

And the Apostles and Elders with the whole congregacion thonghte it good, to chose out men of them, and to sende them vito Antioche with l'aul and Barnabas, namely © ludas, whose syrname was Barsabas, and Sylas (which were chefe men amoge the brethre) and gaue the letters in their handes after this mance:
3 We the Apostles and Elders a brethren, wrish health rnto the brethre of the Heythe which are at Antioche, and Syria and Celicia. For so moch as we haue herde that certayne of oures are departed, ${ }^{a}$ and have troubled you, and combred youre myndes, sayenge : ye must be circumeysed, and kepe $y$ lawe (to whom we gave no soch commaundemēt) it semed good unto rs, bernge gathered together with one accorde, to chose out men, and to sende them wnto you, with oure beloued Barnabas and Paul, men that haue $\|$ ioperded their lyues for y y name of oure LORDE Iesus Christ. Therfore haue we sent Iudas and Sylas, which shal also tell you the same with wordes. For it pleased the holy goost and vs, to laye no charge yon you, more then these necessary poyntes: That ye absteyne from the 9 offeringes of Idols, and from bloude, and from strangled, and from whordome. From the which yf ye absterne youre selues, ye shal do well. Fare ye well.

Whan these were sent forth, they came vnto Antioche, and gathered the multitude together, and delyuered the epistle. Whan they had red it, they were glad of that cosolacion. As for Iudas a Sylas (which were prophetes also) they exorted $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ brethre with moch preachinge, and strēgthed them. And whan they had taried there for a season, they were let go of the brethren in peace 玉 vntio the Apostles. Notwithstondinge Sylas thoughte it good to byde there styll. But Paul and Barnabas cōtynued at Antioche, teachinge and preachinge the worde of the I.ORDE, with other many.

[^1135]Ncuertheles after certayne dayes Paul sayde unto Barnabas: let vs go agayne, and vyset oure brethren thorow all the cities (wherin we have shewed the worde of the LORDE) how they do. But Barnabas gaue councell, that they shulde take with the Ihon, whose syrname was Marke. Howbeit Paul thoughte it mete, not to take him with them,  which departed from them in Pamphilia, and wente not with them rnto the worke. And so sharpe was the strife betwene them, that they departed asunder $\stackrel{y}{y}$ one fro the other, and Barnabas toke Marke vnto him, and sayled unto Cypers. But Paul chose Sylas, and departed, beynge comytted of the brethren vnto the grace of God. He wente thorow Syria and Celicia, stablishynge the congregacions.

Tye rbi. Chapter.

HE came vnto Derba and to Lystra, and beholde, a certayne disciple was there named Timotheus, the sonne of a Jewish woman, which beleued, but his father was a Greke: $\stackrel{\ell}{y}$ same had a good reporte amonge the brethré of Lystra and at Iconium. Paul wolde that the same shulde go forth with him, and toke and t+ circumeysed him because of the lewes that were in those quarters. For they knewe all, that his father was a Greke. But as they wente thorow the cities, they delyuered them the sentence to kepe, ttwhich was concluded of the Apostles and Elders at Ierusalem. The were the congregacions stablyshed in the faith, and increased in nombre daylie.

But as they wente thorow Phrygia and the londe of Galacia, they were $$ $$ forbydden of the holy goost, to preache the worde in Asia. Howbeit as they came in to Mysia, they proned to take their iourney in to Bithinia, and the sprete suffred them not.

Neuertheles whan they had passed thorow Mysia, they came downe to Troada, and there appeared a IIII rision vnto Paul by night, that there was a man of Macedonia which stode and prayed him, and sayde: Come downe to Macedonia, and helpe rs. Whan he had sene $\hat{y}$ vision, we soughte immediatly to go, rnto Macedonia, beynge certified, that y LORDE had called vs thither, to preach the Gospell vnto them. Thē departed we from Troada, and came the straight course vnto Samothracia, on the nexte daye to Neapolis, and from thence to Philippis, which is the chefe cite of the londe of Macedonia, and a fre cite. In this cite abode we certayne dayes.

On the daye of the Sabbathes wēte we out of the cite besyde the water, where men were wonte to praye, and we sat downe, and spake vnto the wemen that resorted thither. And a deuoute woman (named Lydia) a seller of purple, out of the cite of Thiatira, herkened to, whose hert the LORDE opened that she gate hede vnto the thinges that Paul spake. Whan she was baptysed and hir housholde, she besoughte vs, and sayde: Yf ye thynke that I beleue on the LORDE, then come in to my house, and a byde there. And she * constrayned vs.

It fortuned whan we wente to prayer, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ there met vs a damsel, which had a sprete of soythsayenge, and broughte hir master and mastresse greate vauntage with soyth sayenge: y same folowed Paul and vs, and cryed, and sayde: These men are the seruauntes of the most hye God, which shewe vs $\dot{y}$ waye of saluacion. This dyd she many dayes. But Paul was not content with it, and turned him aboute, and sayde vnto the sprete: I comaunde the in the name of Iesu Christ, that thou departe out of her. ${ }^{a}$ And he departed out at the same houre.

But whā hir master and mastresse sawe that the hope of their vauntage was gone, ${ }^{b}$ t they toke Paul and Sylas, drue them in to the market place before y rulers, a broughte the vnto the officers, and sayde: These men trouble oure cyte, 匹 are Iewes, and preach an ordynaunce, which is not laufull for vs to receaue, ner to obserue, seynge we are Romaynes. And the people rāne on them, and the officers rente their clothes, and comaunded them to be beaten with roddes. ${ }^{c}$ And whan they had beaten them sore, they cast thè in preson, and commaunded the iayler, to kepe them diligettly. Which whan he had receaued soch commaundement, he cast the in to the ynner preson, and put their fete in the stockes.

But at mydnight prayed Paul and Sylas, and praysed God. And the presoners herde [^1137]them. Sodenly was there a greate earth quake, so that the foundacions of the preson were shaken. And immediatly were all the dores open, $\mathbb{t}$ all their bondes lowsed Whā the keper of the preson waked out of slepe, and sawe the preson dores open, he drue out his swerde, and wolde haue kylled him selfe: for he thoughte $\hat{y}$ presoners had bene fled. But Paul cryed loude, and sayde: Do thy self no harme, for we are all here.

He called for a lighte, and sprange in, and trembled, and fell at the fete of Paul and Sylas, and broughte them out, and sayde: Syrs, what must I do, to be saued? They sayde: ${ }^{d}$ Beleue on the LORDE Iesus, and so shalt thou and thy housholde be saued. And they preached the worde of the LORDE vnto him, and to all that were in his house.

And he toke them to him in the same houre of the night, and waszhed their strypes. And immediatly was he baptysed, and all his. And he broughte them in to his house, and set them a table, and $\ddagger$ reioysed with'all his housholde, that he was become a beleuer on God.

And whan it was daye, the officers of the cite sent mynisters, and sayde: Let those men go. And the keper of the preson tolde this sayenge vnto Paul: The officers haue sent hither, that ye shulde be lowse. Now therfore get you hēce, and go in peace. But Paul sayde vnto them: They haue beaten vs openly vncondempned (where as we are yet Romaynes) and haue cast vs in preson, and shulde they now thrust vs out preuely? Not so, but let them come them selues, and brynge vs out. The mynisters tolde these wordes vnto the officers. And they feared, whan they herde that they were Romaynes, and came and besoughte them, and prayed the to departe out of the cite. Then wente they out of the preson, and entred in to the house of Lydia. And whan they had sene the brethren and comforted them, they departed.

A S they made their iourney thorow Amphipolis and Apollonia, they came to Thessalonica, where was a synagoge of the Iewes. And Paul (as his maner was) wēte in vnto them, and vpon thre Sabbathes he ${ }^{4}$ Ioh. 6. f. Mar. 16. b. $\ddagger$ Luc. 5. d. and 19. a.
spake wnto them of the scripture, opened it wato the , and alleged, * that Christ must nedes hame suffred, a ryse agayne from the deed: and this lesus, whom I preach vnto you (sayde he) is $\hat{y}$ same Christ. And some of the beleued, and were ioyned vnto Paul and sylas, a greate multitude also of the dewonte Grekes, and of the chefe wemen not a fewe.

But the styffinecked Iewes had indignacion, and toke rnto them certayne cuell men which were ragabundes, and gathered a company, and set the cite in a rore, and preassed vnto the house of Iason, and soughte to brynge them out wnto the comon people. But whan they founde them not, they drue Iason, and certayne brethren vnto the rulers of the cite, 33 and cryed: 'These that trouble all the worlde, are come hither also, whom Iason hath receaned preuely. And these all do contrary to the decrees of the Emperoure, sayenge, that there is another kynge, ${ }^{a}$ one Iesus. They troubled the people, and the rulers of the cite, that herde this. And whan they had receaned a sufficient answere of lason and of the other, they let them go.

But the brethren immediatly sent awaye Paul and Sylas by night vnto Berea. Whan they came there, they wete in to the synagoge of the lewes (for they were the Eldest amonge the at Thessalonica) which receaued the worde maruelous wyllingly, and + searched the scriptures daylie, whether it were euen so. Then belened many of them, and worshipfull wemen off the Grekes, and men not a fewe. $\ddagger$ But whan the lewes off Thessalonica had knowlege, that the worde off God was preached off Paul at Berea, they came, and moued the people there also. Howbeit the brethren sent Paul awaye then inmediatly, to go vato the sce. As for Sylas and Timotheus, they abode there styll.
c They that conueyed Paul, brought him vnto Athens. And whan they had receaned a commaundement into Sylas and 'Timotheus, that they shulde come suto him in all the haist, they wente their waye. But whyle Paul wayted for them at Athens, his sprete was moued in him, whan he sawe the cite gene so to the worshippinge of ymages. And he spake vuto the lewes and deuoute personnes in the [^1138]synagoge, © in y market daylie vnto the that came to him. But certayne Philosophers of y Epicurees and Stoikes disputed with him. And some sayde: What will this babler saye? But some sayde: He semeth to be a tidinges brynger of new sgoddes (That was, because he had preached vnto the the Gospell of Iesus, t of the resurreccion.) And they toke him, and broughte him before the councell house, and sayde: Maye we not knowe, what new doctryne this is that thou teachest? For thou bryngest strauge tidinges to oure eares? We wolde knowe therfore, what this meaneth. As for all they of Athens, and straungers © gestes, they gaue the selues to nothinge els, but either to tell, or to heare some newes.

Paul stode on the myddes of the comon place, and sayde: Ye mé of Athens, I se that in all thinges ye are to supersticious. I haue gone thorow, a sene youre gods seruyce, and founde an altare, where vö was wrytten: ' $o$ the unknowne God. Now shewe I vnto you ỳ same, whom ye worshippe ignorauntly. God which made $\frac{8}{y}$ worlde, ${ }^{b}$ and all that therin is, for so moch as he is LORDE of heauen and earth, Idwelleth not in temples made of handes, nether is he worshipped with mens handes, as though he had nede of eny man, seynge he himself ${ }^{c}$ geneth life and breth vnto all men euery where: and hath made of one bloude all the generacion of men to dwell vpo all the face of $\dot{y}$ earth: and hath assygned borders appoynted before, how longe and farre they shulde dwell, that they shulde seke the LORDE, yf they mighte fele and fynde him.

And truly he is not farre from euery one of vs. For in him we lyue, moue, and haue oure beynge, as certayne of youre awne Poetes also haue sayde: We are his generacion. For as moch then as we are the generacion of God, we oughte not to thinke that the Godheade is like vnto golde or syluer, or ymagery worke of the crafte or ymaginacion of man. ${ }^{d}$ And truly God hath ouersene the tyme of ignoraunce: & But now he commaundeth all men enery where to repente, because he hath appoynted a daye, in the which he wyl iudge the copasse of the worlde, with righteousnesse, by that one man in who he bath appoynted it : and offred faith into all men, after that he had raysed him vp from the deed.

Whan they herde of the resurreccion of the deed, some mocked. But some sayde: We wyl heare the agayne of this matter. So Paul departed from amonge them. Howbeit certayne men claue vnto him, and beleued: amonge whom was Dionisius, one of the councell : and a woman named Damaris, and other with them.

The rbiij. Chapter.

AFTER that departed Paul frō Athens, and came to Corinthum, and founde a lewe named * Aquila, borne in Pōtus, which was lately come out of Italy: and his wife Priscilla (because the Emperoure Claudius had commaunded all Iewes to departe from Rome) and he drue vnto thē. And because he was of the same crafte, he abode with the, and wroughte. Their crafte was to make tentes. And he preached in the synagoge euery Sabbath daye, and exhorted the Iewes and the Grekes.

Whan Sylas and Timotheus were come fro Macedonia, Paul was constrayned by the sprete to testifye vnto $\hat{y}$ Iewes, that Iesus was very Christ. But whä they sayde cōtrary and blasphemed, the shoke his rayment, and sayde vato them: Youre bloude be vpon youre awne heade. From hence forth I go blamelesse vnto the Gentyles. And he departed thence, and came in to the house of a man named Iustus, which feared God, and his house was nexte vnto the synagoge. Howbeit Crispus the chefe ruler of the synagoge, beleued on ${ }^{\circ}$ LORDE with all his housholde. And many of the Corinthians that gaue audience, beleued, and were baptysed

The LORDE spake vito Paul by a vision in ${ }^{\circ}$ nighte: Be not afrayed, but speake, and holde not thy peace, for I am with the : and noman shal imuade the that shal hurte the, for I haue moch people in this cite. He contynued there a yeare and sixe monethes, and taught them the worde of God.

But whan Gallio was ruler of the countre of Achaia, the Iewes made insurreccion with one acorde agaynst Paul, a broughte him before the iudgment seate, and sayde: This [^1139]felowe counceleth men to worshipe God cōtrary to the lawe. Whan Paul was aboute to open his mouth, Gallio sayde vnto ẙ Iewes: Yf it were a matter of wronge or an euell dede ( O ye lewes) reason wolde that I shulde heare you: but yf it be a question of wordes, and of names, and of $\mathfrak{y}$ lawe amoge you, loke ye to it youre selues, I thinke not to be iudge there ouer. And he droue them from the iudgnēt seate. Then all the Grekes toke Sosthenes the ruler of the Sinagoge, and smote him before the iudgment seate. And Gallio cared for none of tho thinges.

Paul after $\stackrel{t}{y}$ he had taried a good whyle, toke his leue of the brethren, and sayled in to Syria, Priscilla © Aquila bearinge him company. And he shore his heade at Cenchrea (for he had a $\ddagger$ vowe) © eame downe to Ephesus, a lefte them there. But he himselfe wete in to the synagoge, and reasoned with the Iewes. And they desyred him, that he wolde tary with them a longer season. And he eosented not, but bad them farwele, and sayde: I must nedes in eny wyse kepe this feast that commeth, at Ierusalem: but § yf God wyl, I wil returne agayne vnto you.

And he departed from Ephesus, and came to Cesarea, and wente vp, and saluted ${ }^{\mathrm{y}}$ congregacion, and toke his iourney downe to Antioche, and taried there a certayne tyme, and departed, and walked thorow all $\dot{y}$ countre of Galatia and Phrigia by ordre, and strengthed all the disciples.

There came vnto Ephesus a certayne Iewe, named II Apollo (borne at Alexädria) an eloquent man, and mightie in the scriptures: the same was infourmed in the waye of the LORDE, and spake feruently in the sprete, and taughte diligently the thinges of the LORDE, and knewe but the baptyme off Ihon onely. The same beganne to speake boldly in the synagoge. Whan Aquila and Priscilla herde him, they toke him vnto the, and expounded the waye of God vnto him more perfeetly. But whan he wolde go in to Achaia, the brethren wrote, and exorted the diseiples to receaue him. And whan he was come thither, he helped them moch which beleued thorow grace. For he ouereame the Iewes mightely, and shewed openly by $\dot{y}$ scripture, that Iesus was Christ.

Ebe ris. Chapter.

${ }^{3} \mathrm{~B}$["l' it fortuned whan Apollo was at Corinthmm, that Paul walked thorow the rpper coastes, and came to Ephesus, and founde certayne disciples, in to whom he sayde: Hane ye receaned $\ddot{y}$ holy goost, sence ye belened"' 'They sayde into hī: We haue not herde, whether there be an holy goost. He sayde wato them: Where with then were ye baptysed? They sayde: With the baptyme of thon. Paul sayde: ${ }^{a}$ Ihon baptysed with the baptyne of repentaunce, and spake vnto $\mathfrak{y}$ people, that they shulde beleue on him, which shulde come after him, that is, on lesus, that the same is Christ. Whan they herde that, they were baptysed in the name of the LORDE lesu. And whan Paul layed the haides on the , the holy goost came rpon them, and they spake with tunges, and prophecied. And all the men were aboute trolue.

He wète in to y synagoge, and preached boldly thre monethes longe, teachinge, and geuynge them exortacions of the kyngdome of Gorl. But whan dyuerse waxed herde herted, and belened not, and spake euell of the waye of the LORDE before the multitude, he departed from them, and separated the disciples, and disputed daylye in the scole of one ealled Tyrannus. And this was done two yeares loge, so that all they which dwelt in Asia, herde the worde of the LORDE lesu, both Iewes $\pi$ Grekes. And God wroughte no small miracles by the handes of Paul, so that from his body there were broughte napkyns or partlettes into the sicke, and the diseases departed from them, and the euell spretes wente out of them.

But certayne of the ragabounde lewes which were coniurers, sudertoke to name $\dot{y}$ name of the LORDE Iesus, ouer those that had euell spretes, and sayde: We charge you by lesus whom Paul preacheth. They were seuen sonnes of one Sceua a lewe the hye prest, which dyd so. The euell sprete answered, and sayde: lesus 1 knowe, and Pand $t$ knowe, but who are ye? And the mā in who the enell sprete was, ranne rpon them, and ouercame them, and cast them moder him, io that they fled out of the same house naked and wounded. This was knowne vito all the lewes and Grekes which dwelt at Ephesus, and there fell a feare rpon them all. And $\mathfrak{y}$ name of the LORDE lesus was magnified. *Many of the also that beleued, came and cōfessed, and shewed their workes. But many of them that had vsed curious craftes, broughte the bokes together, and burnte them openly: and they counted the pryce of them, and founde it of money fiftye thousande pens. So mightely grewe ${ }^{f} \mathrm{f}$ worde of the LORDE, and preuayled.

Whan this was done, Paul purposed in sprete to take his iourney thorow Macedonia and Achaia, and to go to lerusale, and sayde: After that I haue bene there, I must se Rome also. And he sent in to Macedonia two that mynistred unto him, Timotheus and Erastus. But he himselfe remayned in Asia for a season. At the same tyme there rose no litle a doo aboute that waye. For a certayne man named Demetrius a goldsmyth, which made syluer shrynes for Diana, and broughte them of the crafte no small vauntage. Them he gathered together, and the feloweworkme of the same occupacion, and sayde: Syrs, ye knowe that by this crafte we haue vauntage, and ye se and heare, that not onely at Ephesus, but almost also thorow out all Asia, this Paul turneth awaye moch people with his persuadynge, and sayeth: t'They be not goddes that are made with hondes. Howbeit it shal not onely brynge oure occupacion to this poynte to be set at naught, but also the temple of greate Diana shal from hence forth be despysed, and hir maiestye also shalbe destroyed, who neuertheles all Asia and the worlde worshippeth.

Whan they herde this, they were full of wrath, cried out, and sayde: Greate is Diana of the Ephesians. And all $\dot{y}$ cite was on a roore, and they ruszhed in with one assent in to the open place, and toke Gaius and Aristarchus of Macedonia, Pauls companyons. Whan Paul wolde haue gone in amonge the people, the disciples suffred him not. Certayne also of $\dot{y}$ chefe of Asia which were Pauls good frendes, sent rnto him, and desyred him, that he shulde not preasse in to the open place. Some cried one thinge, some another. And the congregacion was out of quyete, and the more parte knewe not wherfore they were come together. Some of the people drue forth Alexander. whan $\mathfrak{y}$ lewes thrust [^1140]him forwarde. Alexāder beckened with the hande, and wolde have geuen the people an answere. But whan they knewe that he was a Iewe, there arose a shoute of all, and cried the space of two houres: Greate is Diana of the Ephesians.

Whan the towne clarke lad stylled the people, he sayde: Ye men of Ephesus, what man is it which knoweth not, that the cite of $\hat{y}$ Ephesias is a worshipper of the greate goddesse Diana, and of the heauenly ymage? Seinge now that this can not be sayde agaynst, ye ought to be contente, and to do nothinge without aduysement. Ye have broughte hither these men, which are nether churchrobbers ner blasphemers off youre goddesse.

But yff Demetrius and they that are craftesmen with him, haue ought to saye vn to eny man, the lawe is open, and there are rulers, let them accuse one another. But yf ye wil go aboute eny other thinge, it maye be determyned in a laufull congregacion. For we stonde in ioperdy to be accused of this dayes vproure: and yet is there no man giltye, of whom we mighte gene a rekenynge of this vproure. And whan he had sayde this, he let the congregacion departe.

a TOW whan the rproure was ceassed, Paul called the disciples vnto him, and toke his leue of them, and departed *to go in to Macedouia. And whan he had gone thorow those partes, and exhorted them with many wordes, he came in to Grekelonde, and there abode thre monethes. But whan the lewes layed wayte ior him, as he was aboute to sayle in to Syria, he purposed to turne agayne thorow Macedonia. There accompanied him in to Asia, Sopater of Berrea : and of Thessalonica, Aristarchus and Secundus: and Gaius of Derba, and Timotheus: but of Asia, Tychicus and $\dagger$ Trophimus. There sat a yonge man named Eutychos, in a wyndow, and fell in to a depe slepe (whyle Paul was speakinge) and was onercome with slepe, and fell downe from the thirde lofte, and was taken vp deed. But Paul wente downe, and fell on him, and enbraced him, and sayde : Make nothinge a doo, for his soule is in hi. Then wente he ${ }^{1} \mathrm{p}$, and brake the bred, and ate, and talked moch with the, tyll the daye brake, and so departed. $\Lambda$ s for the yoge man, they broughte him alyue, and were not a litle conforted.

But we wente afore in to the shippe, and sayled towarde Asson, wyllinge there to receaue Paul. For so had he appoynted, and wolde himselfe go on fote. Whan he was come to vs unto Asson, we toke him in, and came to Mitylenes, and sayled from thence, and came on the nexte daye ouer agaynst Chios, and on the daye folowinge we aryued at Samos, and taried at Tragilion, and on the nexte daye came we to Mileton: for Paul had determed to sayle ouer by Ephesus, that he nede not to spende the tyme in Asia: for he haisted to be at Ierusalem vp $\bar{o}$ the Whitsondaye, yf it were possible for him.

But from Mileton he sent vato Ephesus, and called for the Elders of the congregacion. Whan they were come to him, he sayde vnto them: Ye knowe sence the first daye $\ddagger$ that I came in to Asia, after what maner I have bene with you at all tyme, and serued $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE with all humblenesse of mynde, and with many teares and tentacions, which happened suto me by y layenges of wayte of the Iewes, how $\dot{y}$ I haue kepte backe nothinge ${ }^{\mathrm{y}}$ was profitable, but that 1 haue shewed you, and taughte you openly, and priuately from house to house. Wherfore I take you to recorde this daye, that I am pure from the bloude of all men: For I hauc kepte nothinge backe, but haue shewed yon all the conncell off God. Take hede therfore vnto youre selues, and to all the flocke, amonge the which the holy goost hath set you to be Bishoppes, to fede the congregacion of Gorl, which he hath purchaced thorow his owne bloude. And whan he had sayde this, he kneled downe, and prayed with them all. But there was moch wepynge amonge them all, and they fell aboute Pauls necke, and kyssed him, and were sory, most of all because of the worde which he had sayde, that they shulde se his face nomore. And they accopanied him unto the shippe.

NOW whan it fortuned that we had launched forth and were departed from them, we came with a straight course vnto Coon, and on the daye folowinge vnto the Rhodes, and from thence vnto Patara. And whan we founde a shippe ready to sayle vito Phenices, we wente aborde and set forth.

But whā we came within the sighte of Cypers, we lefte it on the lefte hande, and sayled vnto Syria, and came vnto Tyre: for there the shippe shulde laye forth the ware. And whan we had founde disciples, we taried there seuen dayes. And they tolde Paul thorow the sprete, that he shulde not go vp to Ierusalem. And it fortuned whā we had fulfilled those dayes, we departed, and wente oure wayes, and they all broughte vs on oure waye with wyues and childre, tyll we were come out of $\stackrel{\ominus}{y}$ cite, and we kneled downe vpō the shore, and prayed. And whan we had taken oure leue one off another, we toke shippe, but they turned agayne vnto theirs. As for vs we ended the course from Tyre, and came to Ptolomaida, and saluted the brethren, and abode with them one daye.

On the nexte daye we ${ }^{\mathrm{y}}$ were with Paul, departed, and came vnto Cesarea, entred in to the house of $\S$ Philippe the Euangelist (which was one of the seué) and abode with him. The same had foure doughters, which were virgins, $\|$ and prophecied. And as we taried there mo dayes, there came downe from lewry a prophet, named 9 Agabus. Whà he was come vnto vs, he toke Pauls gerdell, and bounde his hādes and fete, and sayde: Thus sayeth y holy goost: 'The man whose gerdell this is, shal the Iewes bynde thus at Ierusalem, and shal delyuer him in to the handes of the Heythē. Whan we herde this, both we and they that were of the same place, besoughte him, that he wolde not go vp to Ierusalem. Then answered Paul and sayde: What do ye, wepynge, and breakynge my hert? For 1 am redye not onely to be bounde, but also to dye at Ierusalem for $\mathfrak{y}$ name of the LORDE Iesu. But whà he wolde not be persuaded, we ceassed, and sayde: ${ }^{\dagger t}$ The will of the LORDE be fulfylled. And after those dayes we were ready, T wente up to Ierusalem: There came with vs also certayne of the disciples off Cesarea, and broughte with them one of Cypers, named Mnason, an olde disciple, with whom we shulde lodge. Now whā we came to Ierusalem, the brethren receaued vs gladly. But on the nexte daye Paul wente in with vs vnto Iames, and all the Elders came together. And whan he had saluted them, he tolde by [^1142]|order, what God had done amōge the Heythen by his mynistracion.

Whan they herde that, they praysed the LORDE, and sayde vnto him: Brother, thou seyst how many thousande Iewes there are which beleue, and are all Zelous ouer y lawe. But they are enfourmed agaynst the, that thou teachest all the Iewes which are amoge the Heythē, to forsake Moses, and sayest that they oughte not to circumcyse their children, ner to walke after the same custome. What is it therfore? The multitude mnst nedes come together, for they shal heare that thou art come. Do this therfore that we saye vnto the: We haue foure men, which hane a * vowe on them, take them nnto $\dot{f}$, and purifye thyselfe with them, and do the cost on them, that they maye shaue their heades: and they shal knowe, that it is nothinge, wherof they are enfourmed agaynst the, but that thou also walkest and kepest the lawe. For as touchinge them that beleue amonge the Heythen, t we haue wrytten, and concluded, that they shulde obserue no soch, but onely to kepe them selues from the offeringes of Idols, from bloude, from strāgled, and from whordome. ${ }^{a}$ Then Paul toke the men moto him, and was purified with them on the nexte daye, and entred in to the temple, declaringe that he fulfylled the dayes of purificacion, tyll there was an offeringe offred for euery one of them.

But whan the seuen dayes were allmost fulfylled, the Iewes of Asia sawe him in the temple, and moued all the people, layed handes vpon him, and cryed: Ye men of Israel, helpe, this is the man, that teacheth all men euery where agaynst oure people, the lawe, and this place. He hath broughte Grekes also in to the temple, and hath defyled this holy place. For they had sene $\ddagger$ Trophimus the Ephesian with him in the cite, him they thoughte $\frac{t}{y}$ Paul had broughte in to the temple. And all the cite was moued, and the people ranne together. And they toke Paul, and drue him out off the temple, and forth with the dores were shut to.

But whan they wēte aboute to kyll him, tydinges came to the chefe captayne of the company, that all Iernsalem was moned. Which immediatly toke soudyers and captaynes vnto him, and ranne in amōge them.

[^1143]Whan they sawe the captayne and the soudyers, they lefte smytinge of Paul.

Whan the captayne came nye, he toke him, 玉 and commaunded him $\S$ to be bounde with two cheynes, and axed what he was, and what he had done. One cried this, another that amonge the people. But whan he coulde not knowe the certente because of the rmmonre, he commaunded him to be caried in to the castell. And whā he came to the steppes, it fortuned that he was borne of $\dot{y}$ soudyers because of the violence of the people. For the multitude off the people folowed after, and eryed: \|Awaye with him. Whan Paul was now to be caried in to the castell, he sayde vnto $\mathfrak{y}$ eaptayne: Maye I speake vnto the? He sayde: Canst thou Greke? Art not thou the Egipcian, which before these dayes maydest an vproure, © leddest out in to the wyldernesse foure thousande preny murthurers? Paull sayde: I am a man which am a Iewe off 9 Tharsis, a citesyn of a famous cite in Celicia: I beseke the, suffire me to speake mnto the people. Whan he had geuen him lyeence, Paul stode on the steppes, and beckened with the hande vnto the people. Now whan there was made a greate sylēee, he spake vnto them in Hebrue, and sayde:

YE men, brethren, and fathers, heare myne answere which I make vnto you. Whan they herde that he spake vnto them in the Hebrue, they kepte the more sylence. But it fortuned as I made my iourney, and came nye vnto Damascon, aboute noone, sodenly there shone a greate lighte aboutc

And he sayde vnto me: I am lesus of Nazareth whom thou persecutest. As for them that were with me, they sawe $f$ lighte and were afrayed, but they herde not the voyce of him that spake with me. I sayde: LORDE, what shal I do? The LORDE sayde vito me: Aryse, and go in to Damascon, there shal it be tolde $\underset{y}{f}$ of all that is appoynted the to do. But whan I sawe nothinge for the bryghtnesse of the lighte, I was led by the hande of them that were with me, and came to Damaseon.

There was one Ananias, a denoute man after the lawe, , which had a good reporte of all the lewes that dwelt there, the same came, and stepte unto me, and sayde: Brother Saul, loke vp. And 1 loked vp ypon him the same houre. He sayde: 'The God of oure fathers hath ordeyned the before, that thou shuldest knowe his wyll, and se the thinge $y^{t}$ is rightfull, and heare the voyce out of his mouth: for thou shalt be his wytnesse vnto all men, of tho thinges which thou hast sene and herde. And noy why tariest thou? Aryse, and be baptysed, and wasze awaye thy synnes, and * call rpon the name of the LORDE.

But it fortuned, that whan I was come agayne to lerusale, and prayed in the temple, I was in a traunce, and sawe him. Then sayde he vnto me: Make haist, $\dagger$ and get the soone out of lerusalem, for they wyl not receane the witnesse that thou bearest of me. And he sayde into me: Go thy waye, for $\hat{\xi}$ 1 wil sende the farre amonge the Meythen.

They gaue him audience nnto this worde, and lifte up their voyce, a sayde: Awaye with soch a felowe from the earth, for it is not reason that he shumbe lyue. But as they (riect, and cast of their clothes, $a$ thrue dust in to the ayre, the captayne bad brynge him in to the castell, and commanded him to be beaten with rodiles and to be examyned, that [^1145]he mighte knowe, for what cause they eried so upon him. And whan he bounde him with thonges, I'aul sayde vnto the vndercaptayne that stode by: Is it laufull for you to scourge a man that is a Romayne, and vneondemned? Whan the undereaptayne herde that, he wète to the vpper eaptayne, and tolde him, and sayde? What wilt thou do? This man is a Romayne. Then came $\stackrel{8}{\mathrm{y}}$ vpper captayne, and sayde vnto him: Tell me, art thou a Romayne? He sayde: Yee. And the vpper captayne answered: With a greate summe optayned I this fredome. But Paul sayde: As for me, 1 an a Romayne borne. The straight waye departed from him, they that shulde haue examyned him. And y chefe captayne was afrayed, whan he knewe that he was a Romayne, and because he had bounde him. On the nexte daye wolde he knowe the certentye wherfore he was accused of the lewes, and he lowsed him from the bondes, and commaunded the hye prestes and all their councell to come together, and broughte Paul forth, and set him amonge them.

PAUL behelde the councell, and sayde: Ye men and brethren, || I have lyued with all good conscience before God mnto this daye: 1 But the hye prest Auanias commaunded them that stode aboute him, to smyte hī on the mouth. And they that stode aboute hit, sayde: Reuylest thou Gods hye prest? Aud Paul sayde: Brethrê, I wyst not that he was the hye prest. For it is wrytte: The ruler of thy people shalt thou not curse.
But whan Paul knewe that the one parte was Saduces, and the other parte Pharises, he cried out in y councell: Ye men and brethren, I am a Pharise, and the some of a Pharise, ${ }^{\text {to }}$ Of hope and resurreecion of the deed am I iudged. And whan he had so sayde, there arose a dissencion betwene $\mathfrak{y}$ Pharises and the Saduces, and the multitude was deuyded: for the Saduces saye that there is no resurreccion, nether angell, ner

But whan the discension was greate, $\dot{y}$ vpper captayne feared, that Paul shulde have bene pluckte a sonder of them, and commaunded the soudyers to go downe, and to take him from them, and to brynge him in to the castell. But in the nighte folowinge, the LORDE stode by him, and sayde: Be of good cheare Paul, for as thou hast testified of me at Ierusalem ${ }^{\text {t }}$ so must thou testifye at Rome also.

Now whan it was daye, certayne of the Iewes gathered them selues together, and made a vowe nether to eate ner drynke, tyll they had kylled Paul. They were mo then fortye, which had made this conspyracion. These came to the hye prestes and Elders, and sayde: We haue bounde oure selues with a vowe, that we wil eate nothinge, tyll we haue slayne Paul. But whan Pauls sisters sonne herde of their layenge awayte, he came, and entred in to the castell, and tolde Paul. So Paul called rato him one of $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ voder captaynes, and sayde: Brynge this yonge man to the vpper captayne, for he hath somewhat to saye to him. He toke him, and broughte him to the vpper captayne, and sayde: Paul the presoner called me vuto him, and prayed me to brynge to the this yonge man, which hath somwhat to saye mito the. Then the hye captayne toke him by the hande, and wente a syde with him out of the waye, and axed him: What is it, that thou hast to saye vnto me? He sayde: The lewes are agreed together, to desyre the, to let Paul be broughte forth tomorow before the councell, as though they wolde yet heare himbetter. But folowe not thou their myudes, for there laye wayte for him mo then fortye men off them, which haue bounde them selues with a vowe, nether to eate ner 'drynke, tyll they haue slayne Paul: and euen now are they redye, and loke for thy promes.

* Mat. 22. c. Marc. 19. b. Luc. 20. d. + Ephe. 3. a.

Then the vpper captayne let the yonge man departe, and charged him to tell noman, that he had shewed him this. And he called vnto him two vndercaptaynes, and sayde: Make redye two hundreth soudyers, that they maye go to Cesarea, and thre score and ten horsmen, and two hmudreth speare men at the thirde houre of the nighte, and delyuer the beastes, that they maye set Paul theron, and brynge him safe vnto Felix the debyte, and he wrote a letter on this maner:

Claudius Lysias, vnto the most mightie Debyte Felix, gretynge. $\ddagger$ The Iewes had taken this man, and wolde haue slayne him, then came I with soudyers, and rescued him, and perceaued that he is a Romayne. And whan I wolde haue knowne the cause, wherfore they accused hi, I broughte him in to their councell: then perceaued I, that he was accused aboute questions of their lawe. But there was no accusacion worthy of death or of bondes. And whan it was shewed me, that certayne lewes layed wayte for him, I sent him straight waye vito the, and commaunded the accusers also, that loke what they had agaynst him, they shulde tell the same before the. Fare well.

The soudyers (as it was commannded them) toke Paul, and broughte him to Antipatras. But on the nexte daye, they lefte $y$ horse men to go with him, and turned agayne to the castell. When these came to Cesarea, they delynered the letter vinto the Debyte, a presented Paul before him also. Whan the Debyte had red the letter, he axed off what countre he was. And whā he maderstode that he was of Celicia, he sayde : I I wil heare the, whan thine accusers are come also. And he commaunded him to be kepte in Herodes iudgment house.

AFTER fyue dayes the hye prest Ananias $\mathfrak{A}$ came downe with the Elders, and with the Oratour Tertullus, which appeared before the Debyte agaynst Paul. Whan Paul was called forth, Tertullus begane to accuse him, and sayde: Seynge that we lyue in greate peace by the meanes of $\dot{y}$, and that many good thinges are done for this people thorow thy prouydence (most mightie Felix) that alowe we euer and in all places with all thankes. Notwithstondinge $\frac{f}{y}$ I be nomore

We hate founde this man a pestilent felowe, and a sterer yp of sedicion antonge all the lewes thorow out all the worlde, and a manteyner of the secte of the Nazaretes, * and hiath taken in hande also to suspende the temple, whom we toke, and wolde haue iudged him acordinge to oure lawe. But L,sias the hye captayne came vpō vs, and with greate violence delyuered him out of oure handes, and commannded his acensers to come vnto the: of whom (yf thou wilt enquyre) thou mayest hane knowlege of all these thinges, wherof we accuse him. The Iewes likewyse affirmed and sayde, that it was euen so.

But Paul (whan the debyte had beckened noto him, that he shulde speake) answered: Seynge I knowe that thou hast bene iudge now many yeares amonge this people, I wil not be afrayed to answere for my selfe, because that thou mayest knowe, that there are get nomore but twolue dayes sence I came ip to lerusalem for to worshippe, and that they nether founde me in the temple disputinge with eny man, or makynge eny rproure amonge the people, ner in $\hat{y}$ synagoges, ner in the cite: nether can they proue the thinges, wherof they accuse me. But this It confesse vato the, that after this waye which they call heresye, so worshippe I the God of my fathers, that I beleue all that is wrytten in the lawe and in the prophetes, and haue hope towardes God, that the same resurreccion of the deed (which they them selues loke for also) shalbe, both of the iust and vniust. Therfore studye 1 to haue allwaye a cleare conscience towarde Gorl and towarte men. ${ }^{\text {a }}$
${ }^{b}$ But after many yeares I came and broughte allmesse vato my people, and offeringes: $\ddagger$ whervpon they founde me purifyed in the tomple withont eny maner of rumoure or muquetnesse. Howbeit there were certayne Iewes out of Asia, which shulde be here presente before the, and accuse me, yf they had oughte agaynst me: or els lett these same here saye, yf they haue founde eny varighteousnes in me, whyle I stonde here before $\dot{y}$ councell: excepte it be for this one worde, that I cried stondinge amonge them: §Of the resurreceion oft the deed am I iudged of you this daye.

[^1147]Whan Felix herde this, he dyfferred the $\mid \mathbb{C}$ (for he knewe very well of that waye) and sayde: Whan Lysias the vpper captayne commeth downe, I wyl knowe y yttemost of youre matter. |l But he commaunded the vndercaptayne to kepe Paul, and to let him haue rest, and that he shulde forbydde none of his acquauntauce to mynister vnto him, or to come vnto him.

But after certayne dayes came Felix with his wife Drusilla, which was a Iewesse, and called for Paul, and herde him of the faith in Christ. Howbeit whan Paul spake off righteousnesse, and off chastite and off the iudgment to come, Felix trembled, and answered: Go thy waye for this tyme. Whan I haue a conuenyent tyme, I wil sende for the. He hoped also, that money shulde haue bene geuen him of Paul, therfore called he oft for him, and commened with him. But after two yeares came Portius Festus in to felix rowme. Yet Felix wyllinge to shewe the Iewes a pleasure, left Paul bounde.

The rrb. Chapter.

NOW whan Festus was come in to the countre, ouer thre dayes he wente vp from Cesarea to Ierusalem. Then appeared the hye prestes and the chefe of the Iewes before him agaynst Paul, and intreated him, and desyred fauoure agaynst him, that he wolde sende for him to Ierusalem, and layed wayte for him, that they might slaye him by the waye. Then answered Festus, that Paul shulde be kepte at Cesarea, but that he himselfe wolde shortly go thither agayne. Let them therfore (sayde he) which are able amonge you, come downe with vs to accuse the man, yf there be ought in him.

Whan he had taried amonge them more then ten dayes, he wente downe to Cesarea. And on the nexte daye he sat downe on the iudgment seate, and commaunded Paul to be broughte. Whan he was come, $\mathfrak{y}$ Iewes which were come downe from Ierusalem, stode rounde aboute him, and broughte vp many and greuous quarels agaynst Paul, which they coulde not proue, whyle he answered for himselfe : I haue nether offended ought agaynst the lawe of the lewes, ner agaynst the tēple, ner agaynst the Emperoure.
\| Iere. 39. b. Act. 27. a. and 28. b.

But Festus wyllinge to shewe the Iewes a pleasure, answered Paul, and sayde: Wilt thou go vp to Ierusalem, and there be iudged off these thinges before me? But Paul sayde: 1 stonde at the Emperours iudgmèt seate, where I ought to be iudged: to the Iewes haue I done no harme, as thou also knowest very well. If I haue hurte eny man, or committed eny thinge worthy off death, I refuse not to dye. But yf there are no soch thinges as they accuse me off, then maye no man delyuer me vato them. I appeale vnto the Emperoure. Then spake Festus with the Councell, and answered: Thou hast appealed vito the Emperoure, to the Emperoure shalt thou go.

After certayue dayes came kynge Agrippa and Bernice to Cesarea to welcome Festus. And whan they had taried there many dayes, Festus rehearsed Pauls cause vnto the kynge, $C^{\prime}$ and sâyde: There is a man left bounde of Felix, for whose cause the hye prestes and Elders of the lewes appeared before me whan I was at Ierusalem, and desyred a sentence agaynst him. Vnto whom I answered: * It is not the maner off the Romaynes to delyuer eny man that he shulde perishe, before that he which is accused, haue his accusers presente, and receaue libertye to answere for him selfe to the accusacion. Whā they were come hither together, I made no delaye, but sat the nexte daye in iudgment, and conmaunded the man to be broughte forth. Of whom, whan the accusers stode rp, they broughte no accusacion of soch thinges as I supposed: But had certayne questions agaynst him of their awne supersticions, and of one Iesus deed, whom Paul affirmed to be alyue. Howbeit because I vnderstode not the question, I axed hì, whether he wolde go to Ierusale, and there be iudged of these matters. But whā Paul had appealed, that he might be kepte vnto the knowlege of the Emperoure, I cōmaunded him to be kepte, tyll I mighte sende him to the Emperoure.

Agrippa sayde vnto Festus: I wolde fayne heare the man also. He sayde: Tomorow shalt thou heare him. And on the nexte daye came Agrippa a Bernice with greate pompe, and wete in to the comon hall with the captaynes $\frac{\sigma}{}$ chefe me of the cite. And at Festus cōmaundement, Paul was brought forth. And Festus sayde: Kynge Agrippa, and all ye men which are here with vs, ye se [^1148]this man, aboute whom all the multitude of the Iewes have entreated me, both at Ierusalç and here also, and cried, that he ought not to lyue eny lenger. But whan I perceaued that he had done nothinge worthy off death, and that he himselfe also had appealed vuto the Emperoure, I determyned to sende him, of whō I haue no certayne thinge to wryte vnto my lorde. Therfore haue I caused hi to be broughte forth before you, specially before the (O kynge Agrippa) that after examinacion had, I might have somwhat to wryte. For me thynke it an vnreasonable thinge to sende a presoner, and not to shewe the causes which are layed agaynst him.

My lyuynge truly from youth vp (how it was led from the begymynge amonge this people at Ierusale) knowe all the Icwes which knewe me afore at the first, yf they wolde testifye, for after the most strayte secte of oure Iewysh lawe, ${ }^{a}$ I lyued a Pharise. And now stonde I, and am iudged because of the hope of the tpromes, that was made of God nnto oure fathers, vato the which (promes) oure twolue trybes hope to come, seruynge God instãtly daye and nighte. For the which hopes sake (O kynge Agrijpa) I am accused of the lewes. Wherfore is this iudged amonge you not to be beleued, that God rayseth vp the deed?

I also verely thoughte by my selfe, that I oughte to do many cōtrary thinges cleane agaynst the name off Iesus off Nazareth, $\ddagger$ which I dyd at Ierusalem, whan I shut vp many sayutes in preson, whervpon I receaued auctorite of $\frac{\rho}{y}$ hye prestes. $\mathfrak{C}$ But what we were all fallen downe to the earth, 1 herde a voyce speakynge vito me, and sayege in Hebruc: Saul Saul, why persecutest thou me? It shalbe harde for the to kyeke Gagayst the prycke. But I sayde: LORDE, who art thon? He sayde: I am lesus, whom thou persecutest. But ryse $v p$, and stonde spon thy fete, for therfore have I appeared vinto the, that I mighte ordeyne the to be a mynister and witnesse of it that thou hast sene, and that I wyll yet cause to appeare vnto the. And 1 wil delyuer the from the people, and from the Heythen, amonge who I wil now sende the, to ope their eyes, that they maye turne from the darknesse vnto the " lighte, and from the power of $\dot{y}$ deuell vnto God, that they maye receaue forgenenesse of symes, and the enheritaunce with them that are sanctified by faith in me.
D Wherfore (O kynge Agrippa) I was not faithlesse vito $\frac{\circ}{y}$ heauēly vision, but shewed it first vnto them at Damascon, and at Ierusale, and in all the coastes of Iewry, and to the Heythen, that they shulde + do pennaunce, and turne vito God, and to do the righte workes of pemnaunce. For this canse the lewes toke me in the temple, and wente ahoute to kyll me. But thorow the helpe of God lent vito me, I stonde vnto this daye, and testifye both vnto small and greate, and saye no other thinge, the that $\dot{y}$ prophetes haue sayde (that it shulde come to passe) and Moses, that Christ shulde suffre, and be the first of the resurreccion from the deed, and shew light vnto the people, and to the Heythen.

Whan he thus answered for himselfe, Festus sayde with a loude voyce: Paul, thou art besydes thy selfe, moch lernynge maketh $\dot{y}$
玉 madd. But Paul sayde: I am not madd (Inost deare Festus) but speake the wordes of trueth and sobernesse: for $\hat{y}$ kynge knoweth this well, vito whom I speake frely. For I thinke that none off these thinges is hyd from hint: for this was not done in a corner. Beleuest thou the prophetes, O kynge Agrippa?

I knowe that thou beleuest. Agrippa sayde mnto Paul: Thou persuadest me in a parte to become a Christen. Paul sayde: I wolde to God, that (not onely in a parte but alltogether, I I mighte persuade not the onely, but all them that heare me this daye, to be soch I am, these bondes excepte. And whan he had spoken this, the kynge rose vp, and the Debyte, and Bernice, and they that sat with them, and wente asyde, and talked together, and sayde: This man hath done nothinge that is worthy of death or of bondes. But Agrippa sayde vnto Festus: This man mighte haue bene lowsed, yf he had not appealed vnto the Emperoure.

WHAN it was concluded that we shulde sayle in to Italy, they delyuered Paul and certayne other presoners to the vadercaptayne named Iulius, of the Emperours soudyers. And whan we were entred in to a shippe of Adramitium, to sayle by Asia, we lowsed from londe. And there was with vs one $\ddagger$ Aristarehus out of Macedonia off Thessalonica, and on the nexte daye we came vnto Sidon. And lulius intreated Paul curteously, and gaue him liberty to go to his frendes, and to refresh himselfe. And from thence launched we, and sayled harde by Cypers (beeause the wyndes were agaynst vs) and sayled ouer the see of Celicia and Pamphilia, and came to Myra in Lycia.

And there the vndereaptayne founde a shippe of Alexädria, ready to sayle in to Italy, and put vs therin. And whan we had sayled slowly, and in many dayes were searcely come ouer agaynst Gnydon (for the wynde with stode vs) we sayled by Candy nye unto the cite off Salmo, and came searcely beyonde it. Then came we to a place, which is called Goodhauen, nye where vnto was the cite Lasea. Now whan moch tyme was spent, and saylinge was now ioperdous, because that they also had fasted ouerlonge, Paul exhorted them, and sayde vnto them: Syrs, I se that this saylinge wyl be with hurte and moch dammarge, not onely of the ladynge and of the shippe, but also of oure lyues.

Neuertheles $\hat{\mathrm{y}}$ vodercaptayne beleued the gouernoure of the shippe and $\circ$ master, more then it that was spoken of Paul. And for so [^1149]moch as the haue was not comodious to wynter in, the more parte off them toke councell to departe thēce, yf by eny meanes they might come to Phenices to wynter there, which is an hauen of Candy, towarde the Southwest and Northwest wynde. Whan the South wyinde blewe, they supposinge to haue had their purpose, lowsed vnto Asson, and sayled past all Candy.

But not longe after, there rose agaynst their purpose a flawe of wynde, which is called the Northeast. And whan the shippe was caught, and coulde not resist $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ wynde, we let her go, and draue with the wedder. But we came to an Ile named Claudia, where we coulde scarce get a bote. Which they toke rp, and vsed helpe, and bounde it vnder harde to the shippe, fearinge lest they shulde haue fallen in to the * Syrtes, and let downe the vessell, and so were caried. And whan we had bydden a greate tepest, on the nexte daye they made an outcastinge. And on the thirde daye with oure awne handes we cast out the taeklynge of the shippe. But wha nether Some ner starres appeared in many dayes, and no small tempest laye rpon vs, all the hope of oure life was taken awaye.

And after longe abstinence, Paul stode forth in the myddes of thē, and sayde: Syrs, ye shulde haue herkened vnto me, and not to haue lowsed from Candy, and not to haue broughte vs this harme and losse. And now I exhorte you to be of good cheare, for there shal none of oure lyues perishe, but the shippe onely.

For this night stode by me the angell off God (whose I am, a whō I serue) a saide: Feare not Paul, thou must be broughte before the Emperoure. And lo, God hath geuen in to the all the that sayle with the. Wherfore syrs be of good cheare: for I beleue God, $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ it shal come so to passe, as it was tolde me. Howbeit we must be cast in to a certayne ylonde.

But whan the fourtenth night came, as we were caried in Adria aboute myduight, $\dot{y}$ shipmen demed that there appeared some countre vnto them, and they cast out the leade, and founde it twētye feddoms: and whā they were gone a litle farther, they cast out the leade agayne, and founde fyftene feddoms.

Then fearinge lest they shulde fall on some rocke, they cast foure anckers out of the sterne, and wyszhed for the daye. Whan the [^1150]shipmen were aboute to flye out of the shippe, and let downe the bote in to the see, (vnder a coloure as though they wolde cast ankers out of the fore shippe) Paul sayde to y vndercaptayne and to the soudyers: Excepte these byde in the shippe, ye can not be saued. Then the soudyers cut of the rope from the bote, and let it fall. And whan it beganne to be daye, Paul exhorted them all to take meate, and sayde: To daye is the fourtene daye that ye haue taried and contynued fastinge, and have receaued nothinge: Wherfore I praye you to take meate, for youre health: "for there shal not one heer fall from the heade of eny of you. And whan he had thus spoken, he toke bred, and $\dagger$ gaue thankes to God before them all, and brake it, and begane to eate. Then were they all of good eheare, and toke meate also. We were all together in the shippe two hundreth thre score and sixtene soules. And whan they had eaten ynough, they lightened the shippe, and east out the wheate in to the see.

Whan it was daye, they knewe not the londe. But they spyed an hauen with a banke, in to which they were mynded (yf it were possible) to thrust in the shippe. And whan they had take vp the anekers, they commytted them selues to the see, and lowsed the rudder bandes, and hoyssed vp the mayne sayle to the wynde, and drue towarde londe. And whan we chaunced on a place which had the see on both the sydes, the shippe daszhed vpon it. And the fore parte abode fast vmmoued, but the hynder parte brake thorow the violence of the wawes.

The soudyers councell was to kyll ${ }_{\mathrm{y}}^{\mathrm{y}}$ presomers, lest eny of them whan he had swymmed out, shulde flye awaye. But the vndercaptayne wyllinge to saue Paul, keped them from their purpose, and commaunded that they which coulde swymme, shulde cast them selnes first in to the see, and escape rnto londe: and the other, some on bordes, some on broken peces of the shippe. And so it came to passe, that all the soules came safe vnto londe.

Che priiij. Chapter.

AND whā we were escaped, we knewe that the lle was called Melite. As for the people, they shewed vs no litle kyndnesse:

Luc. 12. a. Mar. 6. e. and 8. a. Ioh. 6. a. 1 Tim. 4.a.
for they kyudled a fyre, and receaued vs all because of the rayne that was come you vs, and because of the colde. Whan Paul had gathered a bondell of stickes, and layed them on the fyre, there came a vyper out of the heate, and leape on l'auls hande. Whan the people sawe the beest hange on his hande, they sayde amonge them selues: This man must nedes be a murthurer, who vengeaunce suflreth not to lyue, though he haue escaped the see. But he shoke of $\mathscr{y}$ beest in to the fyre, *and felt no harme. Howbeit they wayted, what he shulde haue swollen, or fallen downe deed sodenly. But whan they had loked a greate whyle, and sawe $\frac{\mathrm{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ there happened no harme vnto him, they chaunged their myndes, and sayde that he was a God.

In the same quarters the chefe man of the Ile whose name was Publius had a lordshipe: the same receaued vs, and lorged vs thre dayes curteously. It fortuned whā Publius father laye sicke of the feuers and of a bloudy fluse, Paul wente in moto him, and prayed, and layed the handes on him, and healed him.

Whan this was done, other also which had diseases in the lle, came, and were healed. And they dyd vs greate honoure. And whan we departed, they laded vs with thinges necessary.

After thre monethes we sayled in a shippe of Alexandria, which had wyntred in the Ile, and had a badge of Castor and Pollux. And whan we came to Syracusa, we taried there thre dayes. And whan we had sayled aboute, we came to Rhegium: and after one daye whan the south wynde blewe, we came to l'utiolus, where we founde brethrē and were desyred of them to tarye there seue dayes, and so came we to Rome. And from thence whan the brethren herde of vs, they came forth to mete vs to Apiforum and to the Thre tanerns. Whan Panl sawe them, he thäked Gorl, and waxed bolde. But whä we came to Rome, the ruder captayne delyuered the presoners to ẙ chefe captayne. As for Paul, he had lene to byde alone with one soudyer that kepte him.

But whā $\mathfrak{y}$ ́ Iewes spake ${ }^{\text {y }}$ cōtrary, 1 was costrayned to appeale rnto $\dot{y}$ Emperoure: not as though I had ought to accuse my people of. For this cause haue 1 called you, cuē to se you, $\pi$ to speake with you: because $\dot{y} \ddagger$ for $\dot{y}$ hope of 1 srael, 1 am bounde with this cheyne. They sayde vnto hī: We have nether receaued letter out of lewry cocernynge the, nether came there eny of the brethrè, $\stackrel{+}{y}$ shewed or spake eny harme of $\dot{y}$. But we wyl heare of $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$, what thou thinkest: for we haue herde of this secte, that euery where $\S$ it is spoken agaynst. And whả they had appoynted hi a daye, there came many vnto hī in to his lodginge : vnto whō he expoūded $\mathfrak{y}$ kyngdome of God a preached vnto the of Iesu, out of $y$ lawe and out of the prophetes, eue fro mornynge vatyll the eue.. And some beleued $\dot{y}$ thinge $\frac{t}{y}$ he sayde, but some belened not.

But whā they agreed not amōge thē selues, they departed, whă Paul had spokē one worde: Full well hath the holy goost spoke by $\dot{y}$ prophet Esay vnto oure fathers, $九$ sayde: ${ }^{a}$ Go vnto this people, and saye: With eares ye shal heare, a not vaderstöde: a with eyes shal ye se, a not perceaue. And whà he sayde $\dot{f}$, $\mathfrak{y}$ Iewes departed, a had a greate disputacion amonge the selues. ${ }^{a}$ For I am not ashamed of the Gospell of Christ: for it is the $\oint \varsigma$ power of God, which saueth all that beleue theron, the Iewe first a also the Greke: for in it $\dot{y}$ righteousnes that is of value before God, is opened, which cometh out of faith i to faith. Let it rather be thus, that ${ }^{b}$ God is true, ${ }^{\dagger}$ and all mé lyers. As it is wrytten: That thou mayest be iustified in thy sayenges, and shuldest ouercome, whit thou art iudged.

But yf it be so, that oure mrighteousnes prayseth y righteousnes of God, what shal we saye? Is God then vnrighteous, that he is angrie therfore? (I speake thus after the maner off men) God forbyd. How mighte God the iudge $\hat{y}$ worlde? For yf the trmeth of God be thorow my lye the more excellent vnto his prayse, why shulde I the be iudged yet as a synner? © not rather to do thus (as we are euell spoken of, and as some reporte, that we shulde saye) Let is do euell, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ good maye come therof. Whose dānaciō is iuste.

What saye we then? Are we better then they? No, in no wyse: for we haue proued afore, $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ both the lewes and Grekes are all ruder synne. ${ }^{\text {c }}$ As it is wrytte: There is none righteous, no not one. There is none $\frac{t}{y}$ vnderstondeth, there is none that seketh after God. They are all gone out of the waye, they are alltogether become vnprofitable: there is none that doeth good, no not one. $s$ Their throte is an open sepulere, with their tminges they haue disceaued, ${ }^{d}$ the poyson oft Aspes is vader their lippes. Their mouth is [^1154]full of eursynge and bytternesse.\| Their fete are swifte to shed bloude. Destruceion a wrechidnes are in their wayes, and $\mathfrak{y}$ wase of peace haue they not knowne. T There is no feare of God before their eyes.

But we knowe, $\stackrel{t}{y}$, what soeuer the lawe sayeth, it sayeth it vnto them which are vnder the lawe, $\frac{\dot{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ euery monthe maye be stopped, a $\stackrel{ \pm}{y}$ all the worlde maye be detter vnto God, because $\stackrel{t}{y}$ by $\dot{y}$ dedes of the lawe no flesh maye be iustified in his sighte. ${ }^{+\dagger}$ For by the lawe commeth but the knowlege of synne. But now without addinge to of $\frac{y}{y}$ lawe is the righteousnes which avayleth before God, deelared, hauynge witnesse of y lawe and the prophetes: but I speake of $\dot{y}$ righteousnes before God, which eometh by the faith on lesus Christ, vito all, and yoo all them that betene.

For here is no difference. For they are all $\mathbb{C}$ symmers, and wāte the prayse that God shulde haue of the , but without deseruynge are they made righteous eue by his grace, thorow the redempeion that is done by Christ Iesu, whom God hath set forth for a $\$ \pm$ Merey seate thorow faith in his bloude, to shewe the righteousnes which avayleth before him, in that he forgeueth the symnes, whieh were done before nuder the sufferaunce of God, which he suffred, that at this tyme he mighte shewe $\dot{y}$ righteousnes which avayleth before him: $\frac{t}{y}$ he onely mighte be righteous, t the righteous maker of him which is of the faith on Iesus.

Where is now then thy reioysinge? It is exeluded. By what lawe? By the lawe ot workes? Nay, but by the lawe of faith. We holde therfore that a man is iustified so by faith, without the workes of the lawe. Or is God the God of the Iewes onely? Is he not also the God of the Heythen? Yes verely the God of the Heythen also, for so moch as he is the God onely that justifieth the circumcision which is of faith, and the vneireucision thorow faith. Destroye we then the lawe thorow faith? God forbyd. But we mantayne the lawe.

©he iiij. $\mathbb{C}$ )apter.

 HAT shal we saye thë, that Abrahā oure father as pertayninge to y flesh[^1155]dyd fynde? This we saye: Yf Abraham were made righteous thorow workes, then hath he wherin to reioyse, but not before God. But what sayeth $\dot{f}$ scripture? Abrahā beleued God, a $\frac{\dot{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ was counted vato him for righteousnes. Vnto hī ${ }^{\mathrm{t}}$ goeth aboute with workes, is the rewarde not rekened of fauoure, but of dutye: Howbeit vato him, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ goeth not aboute with workes, but beleueth on hinn $\stackrel{t}{y}$ iustifieth the vngodly, is his faith counted for righteousnes. Euen as Dauid sayeth also, that blessednes is onely that mans, vnto whō God counteth righteousnes without addinge to of workes, where he sayeth: ${ }^{a}$ Blessed are they, whose vnrighteousnesses are forgeuen, and whose synnes are couered. Blessed is the man, vnto whom the LORDE imputeth no synne.

Now this blessedues, goeth it ouer the circūcision, or ouer the vacircumcision? We must nedes graunte, $\dot{y}$ ybrahās faith was counted vnto hil for righteousnes. How was it the rekened vnto him? In the circucision, or in the vncircumcision? Doutles tnot in the circucision, but in the vncircumcision. As for the toke of circūcision $\#$ he receaued it for a seale off the righteousnes off faith, which he had yet in $\frac{y}{y}$ vacircusion, $\frac{t}{y}$ he shulde be a father of all the $\dot{y}$ belene, beinge in $\dot{y}$ vncircūcisiō, $\frac{\mathfrak{t}}{}$ it might be coūted vito the also for righteousnes: © that he might be a father of circumcision, not onely of the that are of y circumcision, but of them also that walke in the fotesteppes of the faith, which was in the vncircumcision of oure father Abraham.

For the promes (that he shulde be y heyre of the worlde) was not made mito Abraham or to his sede thorow the lawe, but thorow the righteousnes of faith. §For yf they which are of the lawe be heyres, the is faith vayne, and the promes of none effecte, for so moch as the lawe causeth but wrath. For where the lawe is not, there is also no transgression. Therfore was the promes made thorow fayth, that it myght come off fauoure, wherby the promesse myghte be made sure vnto all the sede: not onely vito him which is off the lawe, but also vnto him that is of the faith of Abrahäll which is the father of vs all. As it is wrytten: 9 I have made the a father of many Heythe before God, whom thou hast [^1156]beleued: which quyckeneth the deed, and calleth it which is not, that it maye be.

And he beleued vō hope, where nothinge was to hope, that he shulde be a father of many Heythen. Acordinge as it was sayde vnto him:  Euen so shal thy sede be. And he was not faynte in faith, nether cosidred his awne body, which was deed allready, whyle he was almost an hundreth yeare olde, nether the deed wombe of Sara. For he douted not in the promes of God thorow vnbeleue, but was strōge in faith, and gaue God the prayse: a was sure, that loke what God promyseth, he is able to make it good. And therfore was it rekened vato him for righteousnes. ${ }^{\dagger+}$ But this is not wryttē onely for his sake, $\mathrm{y}^{\mathrm{y}}$ it was counted vnto him, but also for oure sakes: mito whō it shalbe counted, yf we beleue on him, that raysed vp oure LORDE lesus from the deed. Which $\ddagger \ddagger$ was geuen for oure synnes, and raysed vp for oure righteousnesse sake.

Cfye b. $\mathbb{C l y}$ apter.

BECAUSE therfore that we are iustified $\mathfrak{A}$ by faith, we haue peace with God thorow oure LORDE Iesus Christ, by whō also we haue an intraunce in faith vito this grace, wherin we stonde, $\pi$ ds reioyse in the hope of $\hat{y}$ glorye for to come, which God shal geue. Not onely $\frac{2}{y}$, but we reioyse also $\overline{1}$ troubles, for so moch as we knowe, $\dot{y}$ lill trouble bryngeth paciēce, paciēce bryngeth experiéce, experiëce bryngeth hope: As for hope, is letteth vs not come to cōfusion, because the loue of God is shed abrode in oure hertes, by the holy goost which is geuen vito vs. For whan we were yet weake acordinge to the tyme, ${ }^{6}$ Christ dyed for vs wngodly. Now dyeth there scarce eny man for the righteous sake: Peraduenture for a good man durst one dye. "\$ Therfore doth God set forth his lone towarde vs , in $\mathrm{y}^{\dot{t}}$ Christ dyed for vs, whan we were yet synners: Moch more then shal we be saued from wrath by him seynge we are now made righteous thorow his bloude.

For yf we were recōcyled unto God by y death of his sōne, whà we were yet enemies: moch more shal we be saued by him, now $\frac{t}{y}$ we are reconcyled. Not onely that, but we [^1157]reioyse also in God thorow oure LORDE Iesus Christ, by whom we have now receaued the attonement.

Wherfore * as by one man symned entred in to the worlde, and death by y meanes oft symue: euen so wente death also ouer all men, in so moch as they all hane symued. For synne was in $\hat{y}$ worlde cinto the lawe: but where no lawe is, there is not syme regarded. Neuertheles death reigned from Adam vato Moses, enen ouer them also that synned not with like trangression as dyd Adam, which is $\dot{y}$ ymage of him $\dot{y}$ was to come.

But it is not with the gifte as with the symue: for yf thorow the synne of one many be deed, yet moch more plenteously came the grace and gifte of God vpon many tby the fatoure that belonged vnto one man Iesus Christ.
C And the gifte is not onely ouer one synne, as death came thorow one synne of one that synned. For the iudgment came of one synne vito condempnacion, but the gifte to iustifye fro many synnes. For yf by ỳ synne of one, death raigned by the meanes of one, moch more shal they which receaue the abudaunce of grace and of the gifte vnto righteousnes, raigne in life by y meanes of one Iesus Christ. Likewyse the as by the synne of one, condemnacion came on all men, euen so also by the righteousnes of one, came the iustifienge off life vpon all men. For as by the disobedience of one, many became synners, euen so by the obedience of one shal many be made righteous.
${ }^{\text {a }}$ But the lawe in the meane tyme entred, that synne shulde increace. $\ddagger$ Neuertheles where abundaunce of synne was, there was yet more plenteousnes of grace: that, like as synne had reigned snto death, euē so mighte grace reigne also thorow righteousnes to euerlastinge life by the meanes of lesus Christ.

Cbe bi. Chapter.

a WHAT shal we saye then? Shal we contynue in symue, that thero maye be abundannce of grace? God forbyd. How thal we lyue in synne, $\frac{t}{y}$ are deed from it? $s$ Knowe ye not, that all we which are baptysed in to lesu Christ, are baptysed in to his death? Therfore are we buried with him by baptyme [^1158]in to death, that, like as Christ was raysed vp from the deed by the glory of the father, \| euen so we also shulde walke in a new life. For yf we be grafted with him vnto like death, then shal we be like the resurreccion also: For so moch as we knowe, that oure olde man is crucified with him, that the synfull body mighte ceasse, that hence forth we shulde serue synne nomore. I For he that is deed, is made righteous frō synne.

${ }^{b}$ But yf we be deed with Christ, we beleue, that we shal lyue also with him, and are sure, that Christ raysed from the deed, dyeth nomore: Death shal haue nomore power ouer him. For as touchinge that he dyed, he dyed cōcernynge synne once: but as touchinge that he lyueth, he lyueth mnto God. Likewyse ye also, counte youre selues to be euen deed concernynge synne, and to lyue vnto God thorow Iesus Christ oure LORDE. Let not synne reigne therfore in youre mortall bodye, that ye shulde obeye vnto the lustes of it. Nether geue ye ouer youre membres into synne to be wapens of varighteousnes, but geue ouer youre selues vnto God, as they that off deed are become lyuynge, and youre membres vnto God to be wapès off righteousnes. For synne shal not haue power ouer you, in so moch as ye are not vnder the lawe, but mnder grace.

How then? Shal we synne, because we are not vnder $\dot{\circ}$ lawe, but vader grace? God forbyd. ${ }^{+1}$ Knowe ye not, that loke vuto who ye geue ouer youre selues as seruauntes to obeye, his seruauntes ye are to whom ye obey, whether it be of synne vnto death, or of obediēce vnto righteousnes? But God be thanked, that though ye haue bene the seruauntes of synne, ye are now yet obedient of herte to the ensample off the doctryne, wherunto ye are commytted. For now that ye are made fre from synne, ye are become the seruauntes of righteousnes.

I wil speake grosly, because of the weaknes of youre flesh. Like as ye haue geuen ouer youre membres to the seruyce of vnclennesse, from one wickednesse to another: Eue so now also geue ouer youre membres to the seruyce of righteousnesse, that they maye be holy. For whan ye were the seruauntes of synne, ye were lowse from righteousnes. What frute [^1159]Thad ye at that tyme in those thinges, wherof ye are now ashamed? For the ende of soch thinges is death. But now that ye be fre from synne, and are become the seruauntes of God, ye haue youre frute that ye shulde be holy: but the ende is euerlastinge life. *For death is the rewarde of synne, but the gifte of God is euerlastinge life.

KNOWE ye not brethren (for I speake vnto them that knowe the lawe) how that $\dot{y}$ lawe hath power vpon a man as longe as he lyucth? ${ }^{a}$ For the woman ${ }^{ \pm}$is in subieccion to the man, is bounde vnto the lawe whyle the man lyueth: but yf the man dye, then is she lowsed from the lawe that concerneth the man. + Yf she be now with another man, whyle the man lyueth, she shal be called a wedlocke breaker. But yf the man be deed, then is she fre from the lawe, so that she is no wedlocke breaker, yf she be with another man.

Euen so my brethren, ye also are deed vnto the lawe by the body of Christ, that ye shulde be with another (namely with him which is raysed vp from the deed) that we shulde brynge forth frute vnto God. For whan we were in the flesh, the synfull lustes (which were stered vp by the lawe) were mightie in oure membres to brynge forth frute vato death. But now are we lowsed from the lawe, and deed vnto it, that helde vs captyue, so that we shulde serue in a new conuersacion of the sprete, and not in the olde conuersacion of the letter.
What shal we saye then? Is the lawe synne? God forbyd: Neuertheles I knewe not synne, but by $\hat{y}$ lawe. For I had knowne nothinge of lust, yf the lawe had not sayde: $\ddagger$ Thou shalt not lust. But then toke synne occasion at the commaundement, and stered vp in me all maner of lust. For without the lawe synne was deed. As for me, I lyued some tyme without lawe. Howbeit whan the commaundement came, synne reuyued, but I was deed. And the very same commaundement that was geuen me vnto life, was founde to be vito me on occasion of death. For synne toke occasion at the comaundement, and disceaued me, and slewe me by the same commaundement. The lawe in dede is holy, and the commaundement holy, iust and good. Is that then which [^1160]is good, become death unto me? God forbyd. But synne, that it mighte appeare how $\mathrm{y}^{\bullet}$ it is synne, hath wroughte me death thorow good: that synne mighte be out of measure synfull by the commaundement. For we knowe, that the lawe is spirituall, but I am carnall, II solde under synne: because I knowe not what I do. For I do not $\dot{f}$ I will, but what I hate, $\stackrel{\text { y }}{y}$ do I. If I do now that which I wil not, the graunte I, that the lawe is good.

So then it is not $I$ that do it, but symne that $\mathbb{C}$ dwelleth in me: for I knowe that in me ( ${ }^{\frac{t}{y}}$ is, in my ${ }^{\text {© }}$ flesh) there dwelleth no good thinge. To wyll is present with me, but to perfourme $\dot{y}$ which is good, I fynde not. For y good that I wyll, do I not: but the euell which I wil not, that do I. If I do now that I wil not, then is it not I that do it, but synne that dwelleth in me.

Thus fynde I now by the lawe, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ whan I wyl do good, euell is present with me. For I delite in the lawe of God after the inwarde man: but I se another lawe in my membres, which stryueth agaynst $\dot{y}$ lawe of my mynde, and taketh me presoner in $\mathfrak{y}$ lawe of synne, which is in my membres. O wretched man that I am, who shal delyuer me from the body of this death? I thanke God thorow Iesus Christ oure LORDE. So then with the mynde I serue $f$ lawe of God, but with the flesh the lawe of symne.

The biili. (Clapter.

THEN is there now no damnacion vato the that are in Christ Iesu, which walke not after the flesh, but after $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ sprete. For $\stackrel{8}{y}$ lawe of ẙ sprete ( $y$ bryngeth life ì Christ Iesu) hath made me  fre frō the lawe of synne a death. t+For what vnpossible was vnto y lawe (in as moch as it was weake because of the flesh) $\stackrel{t}{y}$ perfourmed God, a sent his sonne in $\dot{y}$ similitude of synfull flesh, $\mathfrak{t}$ by $\ddagger \ddagger$ synne daned synne in $\hat{y}$ flesh: that the righteousnes requyred of the lawe, mighte be fulfylled in vs, which walke not after the flesh, but after the sprete. For they that are fleshly, are fleshly mynded: but they that are goostly, are goostly mynded. To be fleshly mynded, is death: but to be goostly mynded, is life and peace. For to be fleshly mynded is enemyte agaynst God, $\S \delta$ syth it is not subdued vnto ${ }^{\circ} \mathrm{g}$ lawe of God, for it can not also. As for the [^1161]Ithat are fleshlye, they can not please God. Howbeit ye are not fleshly, but goostly, yf so be that the sprete of God dwell in you. But who so hath not the sprete of Christ, the same is not his. Neuertheles yf Christ be in you, then is the body deed because of synne. But the sprete is life for righteousnes sake.

$\pm$ Wherfore of the sprete of him, that raysed up lesus from the deed, dwell in you, then shal euen he also that raysed tp Christ from the deed, quyeke youre mortal bodies, because ${ }^{t}$ his sprete dwelleth in you. Therfore brethre we are now detters, not to the flesh, to lyue after the flesh: for yf ye lyue after $\dot{y}$ fleshe, ye must dye; but yf ye mortyfye the dedes of the body thorow the sprete, ye shal lyue. For who so euer are led by the sprete of God, are Gods childre: ${ }^{a}$ for ye hane not receaued the sprete of bondage to feare eny more, but ye haue receaued y sprete of adopcion, wherby we crye: Abba, deare father.* The same sprete certifieth oure sprete, that we are the childre of God. If we be childre, then are we heyres also, namely the heyres of God, and heyres annexed with Christ, yf so be that we suffer together, that we maye be also glorified together.
$\mathfrak{C}$ For I suppose, that the affliccions off this tyme, ${ }^{b}$ are not worthy of $\stackrel{8}{y}$ glorye, which shalbe shewed vpon vs. + For the feruent loginge of ý creature loketh for the appearinge of the children of God, because the creature is subdued vnto vanyte agaynst hir will, but for his wyll that hath subdued her spon hope. For the creature also shal be fre from the bondage of corrupcion, vuto the glorious libertye of the childre of God. For we knowe, that euery creature groneth, and $\ddagger$ trauayleth with is in payne vito the same tyme.

Not they only, but we oure selues also, which haue the first frutes of the sprete, grone within in oure selues for the childshippe, and loke for $y$ delyueraunce of oure bodye. For we are saued $\overline{1}$ dede, howbeit $i$ hope: but $y$ hope that is sene, is no hope : for how can a man hope for that which he seyeth? But yf we hope for that which we se not, the do we thorow pacience abyde for it.
D Likewyse the sprete also helpeth oure weaknesse: for we knowe not what we shulde deogre as we oughte: §neuertheles $\mathfrak{y}$ sprete Gal. 2. a. ! Tim. 1. a. - : Cor. 1. c. and j. a. Eph.

it selfe maketh intercession mightely for vs with vnoutspeakable gronynges. Howbeit he $\dot{y}$ searcheth the hert, knoweth what the mynde of the sprete is: for he maketh intercession for the sayntes acordinge to the pleasure of God. But sure we are, that all thinges serue for the best vnto them that loue of God, which are called of purpose. For those whom he knewe before, hath he ordeyned also before, $\dot{y}$ they shulde be like fashioned vnto $\dot{y}$ shappe of his sonne, $\frac{t}{y}$ he mighte be the first begottē amōge many brethrē. As for those whom he hath ordeyned before, them hath he called also: and whom he hath called, the hath he also made righteous: and whom he hath made righteous, them hath he glorified also.

What shal we saye then voto these thinges? ${ }^{c}$ Yff God be on oure syde, who can be agaynst vs. Which spared not his owne sonne, but hath geuen him for vs all: how shal he not with him geue vs all thinges also? Who wyl laye eny thinge to $\hat{y}$ charge of Gods chosen? Here is God that maketh righteous, who wil then condemme? Here is Christ that is deed, yee rather which is raysed up agayne, which is also on $\dot{y}$ righte hande of God, and maketh intercession for vs.

Who will separate vs from the loue of God? Trouble? or anguysh? or persecuciō? or honger? or nakednesse? or parell? or swerde? As it is wrytten: ${ }^{d}$ For thy sake are we kylled all the daye longe, we are counted as shepe appoynted to be slayne. Neuerthelesse in all these thinges we ouercome farre, for his sake that loued vs. For sure I am, that nether death ner life, nether angell, ner rule, nether power, nether thinges present, nether thinges to come, nether heyth, ner loweth, nether eny other creature shalbe able to separate vs from the loue of God, which is in Christ lesu oure LORDE.

Eye ix. Clyater.

ISAYE the tructh in Christ, and lye ${ }_{3}$ not (wherof my conscience beareth me witnesse in the holy goost) that I haue greate heuynesse a contynuall sorowe in my hert. - I haue wyszhed my selfe to be cursed from Christ for my brethren, that are my kynsmen after the flesh, which are off Israel: " vnto whom pertayneth the childshippe, and the glory, and the couenauntes and lawe, and the [^1162]seruyce of God, and the promyses: whose are also the fathers, off whom (after the flesh) commeth Christ, *which is God ouer all, blessed for euer. Amē. But 1 speake not these thinges, as though the worde of God were of none effecte: ${ }^{a}$ for they are not all Israelites, which are of Israel: t nether are they all children, because they are the sede of Abraham: $\ddagger$ but in Isaac shal the sede be called rnto the, that is, They which are children after the flesh, are not the children of God, but the children of the promes are counted for the sede. For this is a worde of the promes, where he sayeth: ${ }^{b}$ Aboute this tyme wyl I come, and Sara shal haue a sonne. also when Rebece was with childe ${ }^{c}$ by one (namely by oure father Isaac) or euer the childre were borne, t had done nether good ner bad (that the purpose of God might stode acordinge to the eleccion, not by the deseruynge of workes, but by the grace of the caller) it was sayde thus vuto her: The greater shal serue the lesse. As it is wrytten: § Iacob have I loued, but Esau haue I hated.

What shal we saye then? Is God then vurighteous? God forbyd. For he sayeth vnto Moses: ${ }^{\text {dI }}$ I shewe mercy, to whom I shewe mercy: and haue cōpassion, on whō I hane compassion. So lyeth it not then in eny mans wyll or runnynge, but in the mercy of God. For the scripture sayeth mnto Pharao: ${ }^{6}$ For this cause haue 1 stered the vp, euen to shewe my power on the, that my name mighte be declared in all lōdes. Thus hath he mercy on whom he wyl: and whom he wyl, he hardeneth.

Thou wilt saye then vnto me: Why blameth he vs yet? For who can resiste his will? O thou man, who art thou, that disputest with God? Sayeth the worke to his workman: Why hast thou made me on this fashion? ${ }^{f}$ Hath not the potter power, out of one lompe of claye to make one vessell vnto honoure, and another vito dishonoure? Therfore whan God wolde shewe wrath, and to make his power knowne, he broughte forth with greate pacience the vessels off wrath, which are ordeyned to damnacion: that he mighte declare the riches off his glorye on $\dot{y}$ vessels [^1163]lof mercy, which he hath prepared vnto glorye, whom he hath called (namely vs) not onely of the Iewes, but also of the Gentyles. As he sayeth also by Osee: ${ }^{8}$ I wil call that my people, which is not my people : and my beloued, which is not $\dot{y}$ beloued. And it shal come to passe in $\dot{y}$ place, where it was sayde vnto them: Ye are not my people, there shal they be called the children of the lyuynge God. But Esay crieth ouer Israel: \#T'hough the nombre of the children of 1srael be as the sonde of the see, yet shal there but a remnaunt be saued. For there is the worde, that fynisheth and shorteneth in righteousnes; for a shorte worde shal God make vpon earth. And as Esay sayde before: ${ }^{\text {T}}$ Excepte the LORDE of Sabbaoth had lefte vs sede, we shulde haue bene as Sodoma, and like vnto Gomorra.

What shal we saye then? This wil we saye: The Heythen which folowed not righteousnes, haue ouertaken righteousnes: but I speake of the righteousnes that commeth of fath. Agayne, Israel folowed the lawe of righteousnes, and attayned not vnto the lawe of righteousnes. Why so? Euen because they soughte it not out of faith, but as it were out of the desernynge of workes. For they hane stombled at the stomblinge stone. As it is wrytten: ${ }^{i}$ Beholde, 1 laye in Sion a stone to stōble at, and a rocke to be offended at: and ${ }^{k}$ who so euer beleueth on him, shal not be confounded.

The f . $\mathfrak{C y}$ apter.

BRETHREN, my hertes desyre, a prayer vnto God for lsrael is, that they might be saued. For I beare them recorde, that they are zelous for Gods cause, but not with moderstondinge. For they knowe not the righteousnes which auayleth before God, and go aboute to manteyne their awne righteousnes: and thus they are not subdued vato the righteousnes, that is off value before God. $\%$ For Christ is the ende of the lawe, vnto righteousnes for euery one $\dot{y}$ beleueth. 'Moses wryteth of $\mathfrak{y}$ righteousnes which commeth of the lawe, that the man which doth $y$ same, shal lyue therin. But $\dot{y}$ righteousnes which cōmeth of faith, speaketh on this wyse: Saye not in thine hert: Who wil go vp in to heave?

[^1164](that is nothinge els then to fetch Christ downe) Or who wyl go downe in to $\hat{y}$ depe? (that is nothinge els the to fetch up Christ from the deed.) But what sayeth the scripture? The worde is nye the, cuen in thy mouth and in thine hert. This is $\mathfrak{y}$ worde of faith $\mathfrak{y}$ we preach.

For yf thou knowlegest lesus with thy mouth, that he is the LORDE, and beleuest in thine hert, that God hath raysed him vp from the deed, thou shalt be saned. For yf a man beleue from the hert, he shalbe made righteous: and yf a ma knowlege with the mouth, he shal be saued. For the scripture sayeth: ${ }^{\circ}$ Who so euer beleueth on him, shal not be confounded.

Here is no difference, nether of the Iewe ner of the Gentyle. For one is LORDE of all, which is riche vnto all $\dot{y}$ call vpō him. For who so euer shal call vpon the name of the LORDE, shalbe saued. But how shal they call vpō him, on whō they belene not? How shal they beleue on him, of who they have $\mathfrak{C}$ not herde? How shal they heare without a preacher? But how shal they preach, excepte they be sent? As it is wryttē: ${ }^{\circ}$ How beutyfull are the fete of the $\frac{t}{y}$ preach peace, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ brynge good tidinges? But they are not all obedient vnto the Gospell. For Esaye sayeth: LORDE, who beleueth oure preachinge? So thē faith cōmeth* by hearynge, but hearinge cōmeth by the worde of God.

But I saye: Haue they not herde? 'No donte their sounde wēte out in to all londes, and their wordes in to the endes of the worlde. But I saye: Hath not Israel knowne? First, Moses sayeth: ${ }^{d}$ I wil pronoke you to enuye, by them that are not my people: a by a foolish nacion wyl I anger yon. Esaye after him is bolde, and sayeth: ${ }^{\epsilon}$ I am founde of them, that sought me not: © haue appeared vnto them, that axed not after me. But vnto Israel he sayeth: All the daye loge haue I stretched forth my handes vnto a people $\frac{\mathfrak{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ beleueth not, but speaketh agaynst me.

Che ri. Chapter.

ISAYE then: Hath God thrust out his people? God forbyd: ${ }^{6}$ for 1 also am an Israelite, of the sede of Abraham ont of the trybe of Ben Iamin. God hath not thrust [^1165]out his people, whom he knewe before. Or wote ye not what the scripture sayeth of Elias, how he maketh intercession vnto God agaynst Israel, and sayeth: ${ }^{\text {a }}$ LORDE, they haue slayne thy prophetes, © dydged downe thine altares, and I am lefte ouer onely, and they seke my life? But what sayeth the auswere of God vnto him? 'I haue reserued vnto me seuen thousande men, which haue not bowed their knee before Baal. Euē so goeth it now at this tyme also with this remnaunt after $\mathfrak{y}$ eleccion of grace. ${ }^{\dagger}$ Yf it be done of grace, thē is it not of deseruynge: els were grace no grace. But yf it be of deseruynge, then is grace nothinge : els were deseruynge no deseruynge.

What thē? Israel hath not optayned $\dot{y}$ which he soughte, but the eleccion hath optayned it. As for $\dot{y}$ other, they are blynded. As it is wrytten: God hath geuen them the sprete of nnquyetnesse, ${ }^{*}$ eyes that they shulde not se, and eares that they shulde not heare, euē vnto this daye. And Danid sayeth: Let their table be made a snare ${ }^{t}$ to take the with all, $九$ an occasion to fall, $\tau$ a rewarde vnto thè. Let their eyes be blynded that they se not, and euer bowe downe their backes.
I saye then: Haue they therfore stombled, ${ }^{t}$ they shulde cleane fall to naughte? God forbyd: but thorow their fall is saluacion happened vnto $\hat{y}$ Heythen, that he mighte pronoke them to be zelous after them. For yf their fall be the riches of the worlde, and the mynishinge of the the riches of the Heythen: how moch more shulde it be so, yf their fulnesse were there? I speake vnto you Heythen: for in as moch as $\ddagger \mathrm{I}$ am $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ Apostle of the Heythen, I wil prayse myne office, yf I mighte prouoke them vnto zele, which are my fleshe, and saue some of them. For yf the losse of them by the recōcylinge of the worlde, what were that els, then as yf life were taken of the deed? Yf the begynnynge be holy, then is all $\hat{y}$ dowe holy: $\{$ and yf the rote be holy, then are the braunches holy also.

But though some of $\dot{y}$ braunches now be brokē, and thou, whā thou wast a wyide olyue tre, art grafte in amonge them, and made partaker of the rote and sappe of the II olyue tre, boost not thy selfe agaynst the braunches.

[^1166]IXf thou boost thy selfe agaynst them, then bearest not thou the rote, but the rote beareth the. Thou wilt saye then: the braunches are broke of, that I mighte be grafted in. Thou sayest well. They are broken of because off their vnbeleue, but thou stondest thorow beleue. *Be not thou hye mynded, but feare, seynge God hath not spared the naturall braunches, lest he also spare not the.

Beholde therfore the kyndnesse and rigorousnes off God: on thein which fell, rigorousnes: but towarde the, kyndnes, yf thou contynue in the kyndnesse. Els shalt thou be hewe of: + and they, yf they byde not styll in vabeleue, shal be grafted in agayne. For God is of power to grafte the in agayne. For yf thou be cut out of the naturall wilde olyue tre, and grafted (contrary to nature) in the good olyue tre, how moch more shal they that are naturall, be grafted in their awne olyue tre agayne?
I wolde not that this secrete shulde be hyd from you brethree (lest ye shulde be wyse in your awne cōsaytes) that partly blyndnesse is happened vnto Israel, $\ddagger$ so longe tyll the fulnesse of the Heythen be come in, and so all Israel shalbe saued. As it is wrytten: ${ }^{a}$ There shal come out of Sion he that doth delyuer, and shal turne awaye vngodlynes from Iacob. And this is my couenaūt with them, whan I shal take awaye their synnes. As concernynge the Gospell, I holde them as enemies for youre sakes: but as touchinge the eleccion, I loue them for the fathers sakes.

For verely the giftes a callynge of God are soch, that it can not repente him of them. For likewyse as ye also in tyme passed have not beleued, but now haue optayned mercy thorow their mbeleue: Euen so now haue they not beleued on the mercy which his happened mato you, that they also maye optayne mercy. For God hath closed vp all vnder vnbeleue, that he mighte haue mercy on all.

O the depenesse of the riches, both of the wyszdome and knowlege of God? How incomprehensible are his iudgmentes, ${ }^{b}$ and his wayes unsearcheable? For who hath knowne the mynde of the LORDE? Or who hath bene his councell geuer? Or who hath geué hin ought a fore hande, that he mighte be [^1167]recompenced agayne? For of him, and thorow hime, and in him are all thinges. To him be prayse for euer, Amen.

${ }^{3}$ F OR this cause I Paul am $\ddagger$ a presoner of Iesus Christ for you Heythen, acordinge as ye hate herde of $\dot{y}$ office of the grace of God which is geuen me to you warde. For by s renelacion was this mystery shewed vnto me, as I wrote aboue in fewe wordes: wherby whan ye rede it, ye maye perceane myne voderstondynge in y mystery of Christ, which (mystery) in tymes past was not opened vnto the ehildrē of me as it is now declared to his holy Apostles and prophetes by the sprete: namely, that the Heythen shulde be inheritours also, and of the same body, and partakers of his promes in Christ by the Gospell, wherof I am made a mynister acordynge to the gifte of the grace of God, which is geve me acordinge to the workynge of his power.

Vnto me l|the leest of all sayutes is this grace geuen, that I shulde preach amonge the Heythe y insearcheable riches of Christ, and to make all men se, what is the fellishippe of the T mystery, which fro the begynnynge of the worlde hath bene hyd in God, which made all thiges thorow Iesus Christ : to the intent that now vato the rulers and powers in heaue mighte be knowne by the congregacion the manifolde wyszdome off God, acordinge to $\hat{y}$ eternall purpose, which he hath shewed in Christ Iesu oure LORDE by whom we haue boldnesse and intraunce in all confidēce thorow faith on him. ITHERFORE which am presoner in the LORDE, exhorte you, that ye walke as it becometh youre callinge wherin ye are called, with all humblenes off mynde and mekenes, and longe sufferinge, forbearinge one another in loue, and be diligent to kepe the vaite of the sprete thorow the bonde of peace. One body and one sprete, eue as ye are called in one hope of youre callynge. One LORDE, one faith, one baptyme, one God and father of vs all, which is aboue all, and thorow all, and in you all.

loue maye increace more © more in all maner of knowlege and in all experience, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ ye maye proue what is best, that ye maye be pure, a soch as hurte no mans conscience, vnto the daye of Christ: fylled with the frutes of righteousnes, which come by lesus Christ vnto the glorye and prayse of God.

I wolde ye moderstode brethren, that my busynes is happened vnto the greater furtheraunce of the Gospell, so that my bondes in Christ are manifest thorow out all $\frac{8}{y}$ iudgmēt hall, and in all other places: In so moch that many brethren in the LORDE, are boldened thorow my bödes, and darre more largely speake the worde without feare. Some (no doute) preach Christ of enuye and stryfe, but some of good wil. The one parte preacheth Christ off stryfe and not purely, supposynge to adde more aduersite mito my bondes. The other parte of loue, for they knowe that I lye here for the defence of the Gospell.

What then? So that Christ be preached all maner of wayes (whether it be done by occasion or of true meaninge) I reioyce therin, and wil reioyce. For I knowe that the same [^1180]shal chame to my saluacion, * thorow youre prayer and mynistryuge of the sprete of lesu Christ, as I loke for and hope, that in nothinge 1 shalbe ashamed: but $\dot{y}$ with all cofidence (as allwayes in tymes past, eué so now) Christ shalbe magnified in my hody whether it be thorow life or thorow death. For Christ is to me life, a death is to me auantage. But in as moch as to lyne in $\hat{y}$ flesh is frutefull to me for the worke, I wote not what I shal chose, for both these thinges lye harde vpon me. II descre to be lowsed, a to be with Christ, which thinge were moch better (for me) but to abyde in the flesh is more nedefull for yous.

And this am I sure of, that I shal abyde, and contynue with you all, for the furtheraunce and ioye of youre faith, that ye maye abundauntly reioyse in Christ Iesu thorow me, by my comynge to you agayne. Onely let youre conuersacion be $\ddagger$ as it becommeth the Gospell of Christ, that whether I come $\mathbb{}$ se you, or els be absent, I maye yet heare of you that ye cotrynue in one sprete and one soule, labourynge (as we do) to mayntayne the faith of the Gospell, and in nothinge fearinge youre aduersaries, which is to them a token off perdicion, but vnto you of saluacion, and that of God. A CYMON leter a scruaūt and an Apostle of Iesus Christ. ${ }^{\text {a }}$
Vuto the which haue optayned like faith with vs in the righteonsnes that commeth of oure God, and Sanioure lesus Christ.

* Grace and peace be multiplied with you thorow the knowlege of God and of Iesus Christ oure LORDE.
l'or so moch as his godly power hath geuen vs all thinges (that pertayne vito life and godlynes) thorow the knowlege of him that hath ealled rs by his owne glorie and power, wherby the excellent and most greate promyses are geué vnto vs: namely, that ye by the same shulde be partakers of the godly nature, yf ye flye the corrupte lust of the worlde: Geue ye all youre diligence therfore here monto, and in youre faith mynister vertue: in vertue, knowlege: in knowlege, temperancy: in temperancy, pacience: in pacience, godlynes: in godlynes, brotherly loue: in brotherly loue, generall loue. For yf these thinges be plenteous in you, they will not let you be ydle nor unfrutefull in $y$ knowlege of oure LORDE lesus Christ. But he that lacketh these thinges, is blynde, a gropeth for the waye with the häde, and hath forgotten, that he was clensed from his olde synnes.

Wherfore (brethrē) geue the more diligence to make youre callynge and eleccion sure: for yf ye do soch thinges, ye shal not fall, and by this meanes shal there be plenteously niynistred unto you an entrynge in vnto $\dot{y}$ euerlastinge kyngdome of oure LORDE and Sanioure Iesus Christ.

Therfore wil 1 not be necligèt to put you allwayes in remembraunce of soch thinges: though ye knowe them youre selues, and be stablished in the present trueth. Notwithstondinge I thinke it mete, as loge as I am in this + tabernacle, to stere you vp by puttinge you in remembraunce. For I am sure, that I must shortly put of my tabernacle, euen as oure LORDE Iesus Christ hath shewed vnto me. Yet wyl I do my diligeece, that allwaye after my departynge ye maye haue wherwith to kepe these thinges in remembraunce.

For we folowed not deceaueable fables, whan we declared ynto you the power and commynge of oure LORDE Iesus Christ: $\ddagger$ but with oure eyes we sawe his maiestie, whan he receaued of God the father honoure a prayse, by a voyce that came vnto him from the excellent glory, after this maner: §'This is my deare sonne, in whom I haue delyte. And this voyce herde we broughte downe trō heauen, whan we were with him on the holy mount.

We haue also a sure worde of prophecie, and ye do well that ye take hede thervnto, as vnto a lighte II that shyneth in a darke place wntyll the daye dawne, and the daye starre aryse in youre hertes. And this shal ye knowe first, that no prophecie in the scripture is done of eny priuate interpretacion. T For the prophecie was neuer broughte by the wyll of man, but the holy men of God spake, as they were moued of $\dot{y}$ holy goost.

BUT there were false prophetes also amonge the people, ${ }^{* *}$ euen as there shalbe false teachers amonge you likewyse, which preuely shal brynge in damnable sectes, euen denyenge the LORDE that hath boughte them, and shal brynge von them selues swift damnacion: and $+\dagger$ many shal folowe their damnable wayes, by who the waye of the trueth shal be euell spoke of: and thorow cuvetousnes shal they with fayned wordes make marchaundise of you, vō whō the iudgment is not necligēt in tarienge of olde, and their damnacion slepeth not.
$\ddagger \ddagger$ For yf God spared not the angels that synned, but east them downe with the cheynes of darknes in to hell, and delyuered the ouer to be kepte vnto iudgment: Nether spared the olde worlde, but saued Noe the preacher of righteousnes himselfe beynge $\dot{y}$ eight, and brought the floude p - the worlde of the vngodly: IIII And turned the cities of Sodom and Gomor in to aszhes, ouerthrue them, damned them, and made on them an ensample, vnto those that after shulde lyue vngodly: And delyuered iust Loth which was vexed with the ingodly conuersacion of $\dot{y}$ wicked. For in so moch as he was righteous [^1204]and dwelt amonge them, so that he must nedes se it and heare it, his righteous soule was greued from to daye to daye with their vnlaufull dedes. *The LORDE knoweth how to delyuer the godly out of tentacion, and how to reserue the vniust vito the daye of iudgment for to be punyshed: but speeially them that walke after the flesh in $\dot{y}$ lust of whelemes, and despyse the rulers: beynge presumptuous, stubborne, and feare not to speake euell of thē $\frac{\dot{y}}{\mathbf{y}}$ are in auctorite ${ }^{+}$whā the angels yet which are greater both in power and might, beare not that blasphemous indgment agaynst them of the LORDE. . But these are as $\hat{y}$ brute beestes, which naturally are broughte forth to be takē and destroyed: ईspeakynge euell of $\dot{y}$ they knowe not, and shal perishe in their owne destruecion, and so receaue $\hat{y}$ rewarde of vnrighteonsues.

They counte it pleasure to lyue deliciously for a season: Spottes are they and fylthyues: lyuynge at pleasure and in disceaueable wayes: feastynge with that which is youres, hauynge eyes full of aduoutrye, and cã not ceasse from synne, entysinge vistable soules: hauynge an hiert exercysed with couetousnes: they are cursed children, and haue forsaken the righte waye, and are gone astraye: folowinge the waye of \| Balaain the sonne of Bosor, which loued the rewarde of mirighteousnes: but was rebuked of his iniquyte. The tame and domme beast spake with mā̀s voyce, $\mathbb{\square}$ forbad the foolishnes of $\dot{y}$ prophet.

These are welles without water, © cloudes caried aboute of a tēpest: to whō $\hat{y}$ myst of darknesse is reserued for euer. For they speake $\dot{y}$ proude wordes of vanite, vnto $\dot{y}$ vttemost, and entyse thorow wantannes wnto $\dot{y}$ luste of the flesh, euen them that were cleane eseaped, and now walke in erroure: and pronysc them libertye, where as they them selues are seruauntes off corrupcion. For off whom so euer a man is ouereome, vnto the same is he in bondage. ${ }^{+t}$ For sf they (after they haue escaped from the fylthynes of the worlde, thorow the knowlege of $\grave{y}$ LORDE and Sauioure Iesus Christ) are yet tangled agayne therin and ouercome, $\ddagger$ then is the latter eade worse vito them then the begymynge. For it had bene better for them, not to hane knowne the waye of righteousnes, then after they haue knowne it, to turne from the holy commaundemēt, that was geuen vito them. It is happened vito them acordynge vito the true prouerbe: 111 $\dot{y}$ dogg is turned to his vomyte agayne: and $\dot{y}$ sowe that was waszhed, vito hir walowynge in the myre.

Dearly beloued, be not ignoraunt of this one thinge, sow that one daye is with the LORDE as a thousande yeare: and a thousande yeare as one daye. The LORDE is not slacke to fulfyll his promes (as some me counte slacknesse) but is \|llll pacièt to vs warde, " ${ }^{\circ} \mathrm{f}$ and wyl not that eny mā slulde be lost, but that euery man shulde amende himselfe. Neuertheles* the daye of the LORDE shal come euen as a thefe in the night: in the which (daye) the heauens shal perishe with a greate noyse, and the Elementes shal melte with heate, and the earth and $\dot{y}$ workes that are therin, shal burne.

[^1205]II all these thinges shal perishe, what maner persons then onght ye to be in holy eonersacion and godilynes, lokynge for and hastynge vito the commynge of the LORDE? In the which the heauens shal perishe with fyre, and the clementes shal melt with heate. Neuertheles * we loke for a new heauen and a nex earth (acordynge to his promes) wherin dwelleth righteonsnes.

a/TI litle chikdren, these thinges wryte 1 vato you, that ye shalde not synue: and yf eny man synne, we have an faduocate with the father, euen Iesus Christ which is righteous: $\|$ and he it is that optayneth grace for oure symnes: not for oure symmes onely, but also for the symnes of all the worlde. And hereby are we sure that we knowe him, yf we kepe his cōmaundemētes. - He that sayeth: I knowe him, and kepeth not his comaundemetes, is a lyar, and the trueth is not in him, But who so kepeth his worde, in him is the loue of God perfecte in dede.  Hereby knowe we, that we are in him. He $\dot{y}$ sayeth he abydeth in him, oughte to walke euen as he walked.

Brethren, I wryte no new commaundement vito you, but that olde commaundement, which ye have herde from the begymnynge. The olde comaundement is the worde, which ye haue herde from the begynnynge. Agayne, ${ }^{+\dagger}$ a new comaundemēt wryte I vnto you, a thinge that is true in him a also in you: for the darknesse is past, and the true lighte now shyneth.

He that sayeth he is in lighte, and hateth his brother, is yet in darknesse. He y loueth his brother, abydeth in the lighte, and there is none occasion of euell in him. But he ${ }^{t}$ hateth his brother, is in darknes, and walketh in darknes, and can not tell whither he goeth, for ${ }^{\circ} \mathrm{d}$ darknes hath blynded his eyes.

I haue wrytten vito you fathers, how that ye haue knowne him, which is fro the begynnynge. I haue wrytten vito you yonge men, how that ye are stronge, and the worde of God abydeth in you, and ye haue ouercome that wicked.

Se that ye loue not the worlde, nether $\dot{y}$ thinges that are in the worlde. If eny man loue the worlde, the lone of the father is not in him: for all that is in the worlde (namely the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pryde of life) is not of the father, but of the worlde. And the $5 s$ worlde passeth awaye and the lust therof. But he that fulfylleth the wyll of God, abydeth for euer.

Litle ehildren, it is the last houre, and (as ye haue herde that il|l Antechrist shal come) euen now are there many become Antechristes allready: wherby we knowe, that it is y last houre. DEARLY beloued, beleue not ye euery sprete, ${ }^{t+t}$ but proue the spretes, whether they be of God. For many false prophetes are gone out in to the worlde. Hereby shal ye knowe the sprete of God: Euery sprete which confesseth, that Iesus Christ is come in the flesh, is of God: And euery sprete which confesseth not that Iesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not off God. And this is that sprete of Antechrist, off whom ye have herde, how that he shal come, and euen now allready is he in the worlde. Litle children, ye are off God, and haue ouercome them: for greater is he that is in you, then he that is in the worlde. They are off the worlde, therfore speake they off the worlde, and the worlde herkeneth vnto them. We are of God, 执 and he that knoweth God, herkeneth vnto vs: he that is not of God, heareth vs not. Hereby knowe we the sprete of trueth, and $\dot{y}$ sprete of erroure.

Dearly beloned, let rs loue one another, for loue commeth of Gool. And euery one $\frac{1}{y}$ loueth, is borne of God, and knoweth God. He that loueth not, knoweth not God: for Dearly beloued, yf God so loued vs, we oughte also to loue one another. $\ddagger$ No man hath sene God at eny tyme. God is loue, and he that dwelleth in loue dwelleth in God, and God in him. Here in is the lone perfecte with vs, that we shulde haue a fre boldnesse in the daye of iudgment: for as he is, ene so are we in this worlde. ,HIS Melchisedech * kynge of Salem (which beynge prest of the most hye God, met Abraham as he returned agayne from the slaughter of the kynges, a blessed him, vnto whom Abraham also gave tithes of all the goodes) first is by interpretacion kynge of righteousnes: after that is he kynge of Salem also (that is to saye, kynge of peace) without father, without mother, without kynne, and hath nether begynnynge of dayes, ner ende of life: but is likened vnto the sonne of God, and contynueth a prest for euer.

But cōsider how greate a man this was, to whom the Patriarke Abraham gaue tithes of the spoyles. +And verely the ehildren of Leui, whan they receaue the presthode, haue a commaundement acordynge to the lawe, to take the tithes of the people, that is to saye, of their brethrē, thongh they also came out of the loynes of Abraham.

But he whose kynred is not counted amoge them, receaned tithes of Abraham and blessed him that had the promes. Now is it so without all naysayenge, that the lesse receaueth blessynge of y better. And here men that dye, receaue tithes. But there he receaueth tithes, of whom it is witnessed that he lyueth. And to saye the trueth, Leni himselfe also which receaueth tithes, payed tithes in Abraham: for he was yet in the loynes of his father Abraham, whan Melchisedech met him.

If now therfore perfeccion came by the presthode of the Leuites (for vnder the same (presthode) the people receaued the lawe) what neded it then furthurmore, that another prest shulde ryse after the order of Melehisedech, and not after the order of Aaron?

[^1214]$\ddagger$ For yf the presthode be träslated, the of necessite must the lawe be translated also. For he of whom these thinges are spoken is of another trybe, of the which neuer man serued at the altare.

For it is euidēt, § that oure LORDE © spronge of the trybe of Iuda, to the which trybe Moses spake nothinge eōcernynge presthode, And it is yet a more euident thinge, yf after the symilitude of Melehisedech there aryse another prest, which is not made after y lawe of the carnall commaundement, but after the power of the endlesse life ( ${ }^{a}$ For he testifieth : Thou art a prest for euer after the order of Melchisedech) then the commaundement that wente before, is disanulled, beeause of his weaknesse, and vnprofitablenes. For the lawe made nothinge perfecte, but was an introduccion of a better hope, by y whieh hope we drawe nye vnto God. And for this cause is it a better hope, ${ }_{\mathbf{t}}^{\mathbf{y}}$ it was not promysed without an ooth. Those prestes were made without an ooth, but this prest with an ooth, by him that sayde vnto him: The LORDE sware, and wyl not repente: Thou art a prest for euer after the order of Melehisedech. Thus is Iesus become a stabliszher of so moch a better Testamēte.

And amonge them many were made prestes, because they were not suffred to endure by the reason of death. But this man, beeause that he endureth euer, hatl an euerlastinge presthode. Wherfore he is able also euer to sane them, that come vito God by him: a lyueth euer, || to make intercession for ts.

For it became vs to haue soch an hye prest as is holy, imocent, vndefyled, separate from symners, and made hyer then heauen: which nedeth not daylic ( $$$ as yonder hye prestes) to offre vp sacrifice first for his awne synnes, and then for the peoples synnes. For that dyd he once for all, whan he offered up him selfe. ${ }^{* *}$ For the lawe maketh men prestes which haue infirmitie: but the worde of the ooth, that came sence the lawe, maketh the some prest, which is perfecte for euermore.

For yf that first ('restament) had bene fautles, then shulde no place haue bene soughte for the secōde. For in rebukynge the he sayeth: + Beholde, the dayes will come (sayeth the LORDE) that 1 wyl fymish roi the house of Israel, and rpon the house off Iuda, a new Testament: not as the 'Testament which I made with their fathers, in that daye whan I toke them by the handes, to lede them out of the londe of Egipte: $\ddagger$ for they contynued not in my Testament, and I regarded them not, sayeth the LORDE.

a T HAT first Tabernacle verely had ordimaunces, and seruynges off God and outwarde holynes. Ill lor there was made a foretabernacle, wherin was $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ candilsticke, and the table, and the shewe bred: and this is called y Hoty. But behyude the seconde vayle was the Tabernacle which is ealled Holiest of all, which had the golden censor, and the Arke of the Testament ouerlayed rounde aboute with golde, wherin was the +† golden pot with Manna, and Aarons rodd $\ddagger \ddagger$ that florished, and the tables of the Testament: Aboue therin were the Cherubins off glory ouershadowynge the Mereyseate: Of which thinges it is not now to speake perticularly.

When these thinges were thus ordeyned, the prestes wente allwayes in to the first Tabernacle, and excuted $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ seruyce of God. $\$ 5$ But in to the seconde wente the hye prest alone once in the yeare, not without bloude, which he offred for himselfe and for the ignoraunce of the people. Wherwith the holy goost this signifyeth, that the $\|\|$ waye of holynes was not yet opened, whyle as yet the first Tabernacle was stondynge. Which was a symilitude for the tyme then present, in the which were offred giftes and saerifices, and coulde not make perfecte (as partaynynge to the conscience) him, that dyd the Gods seruyce onely with meates and drynkes, and dyuerse waszhinges, and iustifienges of the flesh, which were ordeyned vnto the tyme of reformacion.

But Christ beynge an hye prest of good thinges to come, came by a greater and a more perfecte "T Tabernacle, not made with handes, that is to saye, not of this maner buyldynge: nether by the bloude of goates or calues:  but by his owne bloude entred he once for all in to the holy place, and hath founde eternall redempcion. were vnder the first Testament) they which were called mighte receaue the promes of eternall inheritaunce. For where soeuer is a Testament, there must also be the death of him that maketh the testament.

* For a Testamét taketh auctorite whan men are deed: for it is of no value, as longe as he that made it is alyue. For the which cause that first Testamèt also was not ordeyned without bloude. For whan all the commaundementes (acordinge to the lawe) were red of Moses vito all the people, he toke $\mathfrak{y}$ bloude of calues and of goates, with water and purple woll and ysope, and sprenkled the boke and all the people, sayenge: This is the bloude of the Testament, which God hath appoynted monto vou. And the Tabernakle and all the ressels of the Gods seruyee sprenkled he with m bloude likewyse. And allmost all thinges are pourged with bloude after the lawe : and without sheddynge of bloude is no remyssion. It is necessary then, that the symilitude of heauenly thinges be purfied with soche: but $\dot{y}$ heauenly thinges them selues are purified with better sacrifices, then are those.

For Christ is not entred in to the holy places $\stackrel{t}{y}$ are made with handes (which are but symilitudes of true thinges) but in to the very heauen, for to apeare now before the face of God for vs: Not to offer himselfe offt ${ }^{\dagger}$ as the hye prest entreth in to the holy place euery yeare with straunge bloude: for the must he often hane suffred sence the worlde beganne. But now in the ende of the worlde hath he appeared once, to put synne to flight, by the offerynge rp of himselfe. And as it is appoynted vnto mē $\overline{\mathrm{y}}$ they shal once dye, and then cometh the iudgmèt: $\ddagger$ Euẽ so Christ was once offred, to take awaye the synnes of many. Il For it is unpossible $\frac{t}{y}$ the bloude of oxen and of goates shulde take awaye synnes. Wherfore whan he commeth in to the worlde, he sayeth: $\mathbb{}$ Sacrifice $t$ offerynge thou woldest not haue, but a body hast thou ordeyned me. Burntofferynges and symneofferynges hast thou not alowed. Then sayde I: Lo, I come. In the begynnynge of the boke it is wrytten of me, that I shulde do thy wyll O God. Aboue whä he had sayde : Sacrifice and offerynge, and burntsacrifices $\pi$ synofferynges thou woldest not haue, nether hast alowed (which yet are offered after $\mathfrak{y}$ lawe). The sayde he: Lo, I come to do thy wil O God: there taketh he awaye the first, to stablyszhe the latter: In the which wyll we are sanctified by the offerynge vp of the body of Iesus Christ once for all.

And euery prest is ready daylie mynistringe, and oftymes offereth one maner of offerynges, which can neuer take awaye synnes. But this man whan he had offred for symnes, one sacrifice which is of value for euer, sat him downe on the righte hande of God, and from hence forth tarieth,  tyll his foes be made his fote stole. For with one offerynge hath he made perfecte for euer, the that are sanctified. And the holy goost also beareth vs recorde of this, euen whan he sayde before: ${ }^{+\dagger}$ This is the Testament, that I wyl make vnto them after those dayes, sayeth $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ LORDE: I wyl geue my lawes in their hertes, and in their myndes wyl I wryte them, and their synnes and iniquities wil I remēbre nomore. FAITH is a sure confidence of thinges which are hoped for, and a certaynte of [^1216]thinges which are not sene. By it $\hat{y}$ Elders were well reported of. Thorow faith we vnderstonde, that the worlde and all the thinges which are sene, were made of naughte by the worde of God.

${ }^{\text {t }}$ By faith offered Abell vnto God a more plenteous sacrifice: by the which he optayned wytnesse, that he was righteous: God testifyenge of his giftes, by the which also he beynge deed, yet speaketh.

${ }^{3}$AMES the sermant of God and of the LORDE Iesus Christ, sendeth gretinge to the xij. trybes which are *seatered here a there. My brethren, comte it exceadynge ioye whe ye fall in to diuers temptacions, for as moche as ye knowe, how $\dot{y}$ the + tryinge of youre faith bringeth pacience: and let pacience hate her parfect worke, $\frac{t}{y}$ ye maye be parfecte and somme, lakinge nothinge.
$\ddagger$ Yf eny of you lacke wyszdome, let him axe of God, which geueth to all men indifferentlie, and casteth no man in the teth: and it shal be gene him. But let him axe in faith and wauer not. For he that douteth, is lyke the wawes of $\dot{y}$ See, tost of the wyide, and caried with violence. Nether let $\stackrel{t}{y}$ man thinke that he shal receate eny thige of $\begin{array}{r}f \\ \text { LORDE. }\end{array}$ A wauerynge mynded mā ys vustable in all his waies.

Let the brother of lowe degre reioyce, in ${ }_{y}^{t}$ he is exalted : and the rich, in $\frac{t}{y}$ he is made lowe. For eue as the floure of $\frac{\mathrm{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ grasse shal he vanyshe awaye. The Sonne ryseth with heat and the grasse wydereth, a his floure falleth awaye, and the beautie of the fassion of it periszheth: euen so shal the ryche man perisshe with his abundaunce.
${ }^{\text {a }}$ Haply is the man that endureth in teptacion, for when he is tryed, he shal receane the crowne of life, which the LORDE hath promised to them that loue him.

Let no man saye when he is tempted, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ he is tempted of God. For God tépteth not monto euell, nether tepteth he eny man. But enery mā is tépted, drawne awaye, a entysed of his awne cōeupiseēce. 'Thē whē lust hath conceaned, she bringeth forth synne, a synne when it is fynished, bringeth forth deeth.

That thou seist, write in a boke, and sende it moto the cogregacions which are in Asia, vito Ephesus and vnto Smyrna, and vnto Pargamos, and vnto Thiatira, and vnto Sardis, and vnto Philadelphia, and vnto Laodicia.

And I turned backe to se the voyce that spake to me. And whe I was turned: I sawe seuē goldē candelstyckes, and in the myddes of the candelstyckes, ${ }^{a}$ one like vnto the sonne of man clothed with a lynnin garmēt downe to the ground, and gyrd aboute the brest with a golden gyrdle. His heed, and his heares were whyte, as whyte woll, $\pi$ as snowe: $T$ and his eyes were as a flamme of fyre: and his fete like vito brasse, as though they bret in a fornace: and his voyce as the sounde of many waters. And he had in his right honde seué starres.  And out of his mouth went a sharpe two edged swearde. And his tt face shone euen as the somme in his strength.

And when I sawe lim, 1 fell at his fete, euen as deed. And he layde his right honde rpon me, sayenge vato me: feare not. I am $\dagger$ The commissinners late it $\mathbf{1 5 3 2}$. but they observe very justly, that it belongs to the commencement of Cromwell's patron. age of Coveritale. Mr. Aulerson, in his 'Annals of the Bible," dates it 1531, hat Cromwell's patronage had commenced much earlier, for we have a lefter to him in August, 1527, from which it appears that Coverdale was then well known to Cromwell, if not in his employ. It the time this letter was written Coverdale was an Augnstine Friar, but in 152 s he had thrown off the Augustine hahit, and become a recular priest-a circumstance inconsistent with the late date assigned to this letter, unless as Mr. A. sippor's, Coserdale afterwards resumed his friar's habit, whieh is a perfectly gratuitous and very improbable supposition. Thire serms no reasm for referring the expression, "begiming to taste of Holy Scriptures," to the commencement of Coserdale's translation, but simply to his early studice of the sacred volume.

[^5]:    * Mr. Anderson in his 'Amals,' Ee., Vol. 1. P. 239, supposes that Coverdale was sent over " to sound Tyndale," to see " whether he was a practicahle man," and "to induce him to return to England." "ulpmitions which retlect greatly on Coverdale's character. and for whieh there is not the shadow of proof. At this time Covrriale, according to our view of his history, had begun the study of Holy Seripture, and certainly was qualified from his attainments as a scholar to help Tyndale. We see no reason to discredit altogether Foxe's statement on this subject.

[^6]:    * Mr. Anderson in his 'Innals of the Bible,' Vol. I. p. 553 , supposes that the translation was commenced with a view to publication some time before, and that the setting forth relates to the printing of what was previously prepared. For the reasons stated above, we cannot adopt that view.

    $\dagger$ It is very astonishing that Mr. A. should misquote this in the following manner-" M. Coverdale (who had been correctur of the press) defended the translation." This gives countenance to Mr. A.'s theory ; but the passage correctly guoted is opposed to it.
    $\pm$ The clanse is not inserted in the folio edition of Burnet, but it is inserted in the 8 vo. edition, which is likely to mislead the historieal inguirer.

    + Are these the "Fruitful Lessons" included in his works published by the Parker Society ?
    $\ddagger$ This is the date to which it is assigned in the 'Remains,' p. 198.
    $\$$ These letters have been considered by Anderson and others, to belong to the year 1538 ; but the transactions to which Coverdale's letters refer, are deseribed ly Strype as taking place in 1539.- $(.14 \mathrm{~m} .3 .549$, ) and the tirst of the letter is indorsed ". Lo AXX," wheh prohably means the year of the king's reign, which would be from April 22, 1538, to April 22, 1539. That Coverdale returned to Englath after the interruption at Paris, and did not leave till 1540, appears from a letter just published in the volume of Coverilate's 'Remains,' dated Frankfort, Mareh 26th, 1518, in whieh he says "I am now on my return to England after an exile of eight years." Twenty-two letters written by him during this period are published in the "Remains." Most of these were written at Bergzabers, his stated place of residence. The correspondence is very interesting, and illustrates the piety and the zeal of this good man. They afford searcely any particulars immediately relating to himself, hut they evinee much disinterested kindness towards others, and great anxiety for the promotion of religion.

    ## Cbe first $\left(\mathbb{C l y a p t r}^{\text {f }}\right.$

    ${ }^{2} \mathrm{P}$AUL, called to be an Apostle of lesus Christ thorow $\mathrm{y}_{\mathrm{y}}$ will of God, and brother * Sosthenes, minto the congregacion off God which is at Corinthum, to them that are + sanctified in Christ Iesus, sayntes by callinge, with all them that call vpon the name of oure LORDE Iesus Christ, in euery place both off theirs and oures. $\ddagger$ Grace be with you and peace from God oure father, and from the LORDE Iesus Christ.

    I thäke my God allwayes on youre behalfe, for the fauoure of God which is geue you in lesus Christ, that in all poyntes ye are made ryche by him, in euery worde, and in all maner of knowlege (euē as $\mathfrak{y}$ preachinge of Christ is confirmed in you) so that ye wante nothinge in eny gifte, and wayte but for the appearinge of oure LORDE Iesus Christ: which shal strength you also mnto $\dot{y}$ ende, that ye maye be blamelesse in the daye of oure LORDE Iesus Christ. $\oint$ For God is faithfull, by who ye are called vnto the fellishippe of his sonne Iesus Christ oure LORDE.

    But I beseke you brethre thorow the name of oure LORDE Iesus Christ, that ye all speake one thinge, and let there be no discension amonge you, but that ye be perfecte in one meanynge. For it is shewed me (my brethren) of you, by them which are of $\hat{y}$ housholde of Cloes, that there is stryfe amonge you. I speake of that, which euery one of you sayeth: I holde of Paul. Another, I helde of $I$ Apollo. The thirde, I holde of Cephas: The fourth, I holde off Christ. Is Christ then deuyded in partes? Was Paul crucified for you? Or were ye baptysed in $\hat{y}$ name of Paul? I thanke God that I have baptised none of you, but Crispus and Gaius: lest eny shulde saye, $\stackrel{t}{y} \mathrm{l}$ in myne awne name had baptised. I baptysed also $\frac{8}{y}$ housholde of Stephana. Farthermore knowe I not, whether I baptysed eny other. For Christ sent me not to baptyse, but to preach the Gospell, not with wyszdome of wordes, lest $y$ crosse of Christ shulde haue bene made of none effecte.

    For the worde of $\dot{y}$ crosse is foolishnesse to the that perishe $f$ but vito ws which are saued, it is the power of God. For it is wrytté:  I wyl destroye the wyszdome of the wyse, $\tau$ wil cast away the vnderstondinge of $\frac{\mathrm{y}}{}$ prudēt. Where are the wyse? Where are $\hat{y}$ scrybes? where are $\hat{y}$ disputers of this worlde? Hath not God made the wyszdome of this worlde foolishnesse? For in so moch as the worlde by the wyszdome therof knewe not God in his wyszdome, it pleased God thorow foolish preachinge to saue them $\frac{t}{y}$ beleue. For tt the Iewes requyre tokens, and the Grekes axe after wyszdome. But we preach Christ the crucified: to the Iewes an occasion off fallinge, and vnto the Grekes foolishnes. But rnto them that are called (both Iewes and Grekes) we preach Christ the power of God and $\ddagger \ddagger$ the wyszdome off God.

    For the foolishnes of God is wyser then men : and the weaknes of God is stroger the men. Brethren loke on youre callinge, how that sis mot many wyseme after the flesh, not many mightie, not many of hye degre are called: but that foolish is before the worlde, hath God chosen, that he mighte coffounde the wyse: And that weake is before $\hat{y}$ worlde, hath God chosen, ${ }^{t}$ he mighte confounde the mightye. And the vyle and despysed before the worlde hath God chosen, yee and that which is nothinge, that he mighte destroye that which is oughte, that no flesh shulde reiosse in his presence. Of the same are ye also in Christ Iesu, which of God is made vnto vs wyszdome and * righteousnes, and ${ }^{+}$sanctifienge and redēpcion, that, acordinge as it is wrytten: $\ddagger$ He that reioyseth, sholde reioyse in the LORDE.

    ## Chy ij. Chapter.

    a $\mathbf{A}$ ND I brethré, whā I came vnto you came not with hye wordes or hye wyszdome, to shewe vnto you the preachinge of Christ. For I shewed not forth my selfe amonge you that I knewe eny thinge, saue onely Iesus Christ, euen the same that was crucified. And I was amonge you in weaknes, and in feare, and in moch tremblinge : \& and my worde and my preachinge was not with entysinge wordes of mans wyszdome, but in shewinge of the sprete and of power: that youre faith shulde not stonde in the wyszdome of men, but in the power of God.

    That we speake of, is wyszdome amonge the $\dot{y}$ are perfecte: not $\dot{y}$ wyszdome of this worlde, nether of the rulers of this worlde which go to naughte: but we speake of the wyszdome of God, which is in secrete and lyeth hyd: which God ordeyned before the worlde vnto oure glorye: ॥which none of $\dot{y}$ rulers of this worlde knewe. For yf they had knowne it, they had not crucified the LORDE of glorye, but as it is wrytten: $\widetilde{\sigma}$ The eye hath not sene, and the eare hath not herde, nether hath it entred in to the hert of man that God hath prepared for them that loue him.

    But God hath opened it vnto vs by his sprete. ${ }^{* *}$ For the sprete searcheth out all thinges, yee euen the depenesses of the Gorlheade. For what mà knoweth what is in man, saue the sprete of mā which is in him? Euen so no man knoweth what is in God, saue $\grave{y}$ sprete of God. As for vs, we haue not receaued the sprete of this worlde, but the sprete which cometh of God, so that we cā knowe what is geuē vs of God: which we lalso speake, not with connynge wordes of mās wyszdome, but with the connynge wordes of the holy goost, and iudge spirituall matters spiritually. Howbeit the naturall man perceaueth nothinge of $\hat{y}$ sprete of God. It is foolishnes vnto him, and he ean not perceaue it : for it must be spiritually discerned.t+ But he that is spirituall, discusseth all thinges, and he is iudged of noman. $\ddagger$ For who hath knowne $y$ mynde of the LORDE? Or who shal enfourme him? But we haue the mynde of Christ.

    ## $\mathbb{C} \boldsymbol{y}^{\text {eiji. }}$ Clyaptrr.

    AND I brethren, coulde not speake nto you as vnto spirituall, but as vnto carnall, euen as vnto babes in Christ. Sy 1 gaue you mylke to drynke, and not meate, for ye mighte not then awaye withall, nether maye ye yet euen now, in so moch as ye are yet fleshlye. For IIII seynge there is ennyenge, stryfe, and discencion amonge you, are ye not fleshly, a walke after $\hat{y}$ maner of men? For whan one sayeth : ${ }^{a}$ I holde of Paul: another, I holde of Apollo, are ye not the fleshlye? What is Paul? What is Apollo? Eue mynisters are they, by whom ye are come to the beleue, and the same, acordinge as the LORDE hath geuen vnto euery man. I haue planted, Apollo hath watred, 58 but God hath genen the increace. So then nether is he that planteth, eny thinge, nether he that watreth, but God which geueth the inereace. As for him that planteth, and he that watreth, $\dot{y}$ one is as the other: but yet shal euery one receaue his rewarde acordinge to his laboure. For we are Gods labourers, ye are Gods huszbandry, ye are Gods buyldinge.

    Acordinge to the grace of God which is geuen mato me, as a wyse buylder haue I layed the foundacion, but another buyldeth theron. Yet let euery man take hede how he buyldeth theron.  For other foülacion can noman laye, then that which is layed, the which is lesus Christ. But yf eny man buylde pon this foundacion, golde, syluer, precious stones, tymber, haye, stobble, enery mās worke shal be shewed. t+t For the daye of the LORDE shal declare it, which shal be shewed with fyre: and the ${ }^{\text {㧣 fyre shal trye }}$ enery mās worke what it is. Yf eny mans worke that he hath buylde theron, abyde, he shal receaue a rewarde: Yf eny mans worke burne, he shal suffre losse: but he shal be saued himselfe, neuertheles as thorow fyre.

    * Knowe ye not that ye are the temple of Gool, and that the sprete of God dwelleth in you? If eny man defyle the teple of God, him shal God destroye. For the temple of God is holy, which ye are. Let no mat disceaue himselfe. If eny man thinke himselfe wyse amoge you, let him become a foole in this worlde, that he maye be wyse. For the wysutome off this worlde is foolishnes with God. For it is wrytteu: $\ddagger$ He compaseth the wyse in their craftynesse. And agayne: s The LORDE knoweth the thoughtes of the wyse, that they are vayne. Therfore let no man reioyse in men. For all is youres, whether it be Paul or Apollo, whether it be Cephas or the worlde, whether it be life or death, whether it be presente or for to come. All is youres, but ye are Christes, and Christ is Gods.

    ## ©loc iiíg. (l)apter.

    LET euery man this wyse esteme vs, euen for the mynisters of Christ, ${ }^{\text {a }}$ and stewardes of the $\|$ seeretes of God. Now is there no more requyred of the stewardes, then, that they be founde faithfull. It is but a small thinge vnto me, that I shulde be iudged of you, or of mans daye, nether iudge I myne awne selfe. I knowe noughte by my selfe,  yet am I not therby iustified. It is the LORDE that indgeth me. Therfore iudge ye nothinge before $f$ tyme, wntyll the LORDE come, which shal brynge it to lighte that is hyd in darknesse, and ope the councels of $y$ hertes, and the shal euery one hane prayse of God.
    43 'I'hese thinges brethren haue I deseribed in myne awne preson a in Apollos for youre sakes, that ye mighte lerne by vs, that noman counte hygher of him self, then aboue is wrytten, that one be not puft vp agaynst another for eny mans eanse. For who preferreth the? +i What hast thou that thou hast not receaned? If thou hast receaued it, why makest thou the thy boost, as though thou haddest not receaned it? Now ye are full, now ye are made riche, ye raigne without vs, and wolde God ye dyd raigne, that we might raigne with you.

    Me thynketh that God hath set forth vs Apostles for the lowest off all, $\ddagger \ddagger$ euen as those that are appoynted vnto death. For we are a gasynge stoeke vato $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ worlde and to the angels, and vnto men. We are fooles for Christes sake, but ye are wyse in Christ: We weake, but ye strōge: Ye honorable, but we despysed. Euen vato this daye we hōger and thyrst, and are naked, and are boffetted with fystes, and haue no certayne dwellinge place, 58 and laboure and worke with oure awne handes. We are reuyled, lilland yet we blesse: we are persecuted, and suffre it: We are euell spoken of, and we praye: We are become as it were the very outswepinges of $\dot{y}$ worlde, yee the of scowringe of all men vnto this tyme.

    I wryte not this to shame you, but as my $\mathbb{C}$ deare childrē I warne you. For though ye have ten thousande instructours in Christ yet haue ye not many fathers. For I have IT begotten you in Christ Iesu thorow $\dot{y}$ Gospell? Wherfore I exhorte yon,  be ye my folowers. For this eause haue I sent vnto you Timothens (which is my deare sonne, and faithfull in the LORDE) that he maye put you in remembraunce of my wayes, which are in Christ, ene as I teach euery where in all congregacions. Some are puft vp, as though I wolde come nomore at you. But I wil come to you shortly ( + +tyf the LORDE wyl) and wyl knowe, not the wordes of the that are puft rp, but $£$ power. For the kyngdome of God is not 1 wordes, but in power. What wil ye? Shal I come vato you with the rodd, or with loue and the sprete of mekenesse?

    ## Tye b. $\mathbb{C h y p t e r}^{\text {fy }}$

    THERE goeth a commen reporte, that ${ }^{9}$ there is whordome amoge you, and soch whordome, as is not once named amoge the Heythen, $\ddagger \ddagger \ddagger$ that one shulde haue his fathers wife.     haue determyned allready as though I were present (cōcernynge him that hath done this dede) in $\hat{y}$ name of oure LORDE Iesus Christ, what ye are gathered together with my sprete, and with the power of oure LORDE Iesus Christ, * to delyuer him vnto Sathan for the destruccion of the flesh, that the sprete maye be saued in the daye of the LORDE Iesus. not that a litle leuen sowereth the whole lompe of dowe? Pourge out therfore the olde leuen, that ye maye be new dowe, like as ye are swete bred. For we also haue an $\ddagger$ Easter lambe, which is Christ, that is offred for vs. Wherfore let vs $\$$ kepe Easter, not in y olde leuen, ner in the leuen of maliciousnes, and wickednes, but in the swete bred of purenesse and of the trueth.

    I wrote vnto you in the Epistle, that ye shulde haue nothinge to do with whoremōgers, r that meant I not at all of the whoremongers of this worlde, ether of the couetous, or of extorcioners, or of the that worshippe ymages, for then must ye nedes haue gone out of the worlde. Il But now haue I wryttē mito you, $\dot{t}^{t}$ ye shulde have nothinge to do with them: (Namely,) yf there be eny man that is called a brother, and is an whoremonger, or couetous, or a worshipper of ymages, ether a raylar, or a dronkarde, or an extorcioner, ${ }^{9}$ with soch shal ye not eate. For what have I to do to iudge them that are without? Do ye not iudge the that are within? As for them that are without, God shal iudge them.  Put awaye fro you him that is euell.

    a THOUGH I spake with the tunges of men and angels, and yet had not loue, I were euen as sowndinge brasse, or as a tynklinge Cymball. *And though I coulde prophecy, a viderstode all secretes, and all knowlege, and had all faith, so $\dagger$ that I coulde moue moūtaynes out of their places, and yet had not loue, I were nothinge. And though I bestowed all my goodes to fede y y poore, and though I gaue my body euen that I burned, and yet haue not loue, it profiteth me nothinge.

    Loue is pacient a curteous, loue enyyeth not, loue doth not frowardly, is not puft vp, dealeth not dishonestly, $\ddagger$ seketh not hir awne, is not prouoked vito anger, thynketh not eucll, reioyseth not ouer iniquyte, but reioyseth in the trueth, beareth all thinges, beleueth all thinges, hopeth all thinges, suffreth all thinges.

    Though prophecienges fayle, or tunges ceasse, or knowlege perishe, yet loue falleth neuer awaye. For oure knowlege is vnparfecte, and oure prophecienge is vnparfecte. But whā that which is perfecte, commeth, then shal the vnparfecte be done awaye. Whan I was a childe, I spake as a childe, I vnderstode as a childe, I ymagined as a childe. But as soone as I was a man, I put awaye childishnes. Now we se thorow a glasse in a darke speakynge, but the shal we se face to face. Now I knowe vnperfectly: but thē shal I knowe euē as I am knowne. Now abydeth faith, hope, loue, these thre: but the greatest of these is loue.

    ## $\mathfrak{C y e}$ riiij. Clapter.

    ABOURE for loue. Couet spirituall giftes, but specially that ye maye prophecye. For he $\frac{t}{y}$ speaketh with timges, speaketh not vnto men, but vnto God: for no man heareth him. Howbeit in $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ sprete he speaketh misteries. But he that prophecieth, speaketh vnto men to edifienge, $\mathfrak{a}$ to exhortacion, and to cofforte. He that speaketh with tunges, edifieth himselfe: but he that prophecieth, edifieth the cogregacion. I wolde that ye all spake with tunges, but rather thatye prophecied. For greater is he that prophecieth, then he that speaketh with tüges: excepte he also expounde it, that the congregacion maye haue edifienge. But now brethren yf I come vnto you, and speake with tunges, what shal I profet you, excepte I speake vnto you ether by reuelacion or by knowlege, or by prophecienge, or by doctryne?

    Likewyse is it also in y thinges that geue $\mathbf{i 3}$ sounde, and yet lyue not: whether it be a pype or an harpe, excepte they geue distyncte soundes from them, how shal it be knowne what is pyped or harped? And yf the trope geue an vncertayne sounde, who wil prepare him selfe to the battayll? Euen so ye like wyse, whan ye speake with tunges, excepte ye speake playne wordes, how shal it be knowne what is spokē? for ye shal but speake in $\mathfrak{y}$ ayre. So many kyndes of voyces are in the worlde, and none of them is without significacion. If I knowe not now what $\frac{y}{f}$ voyce meaneth, I shalbe an aleaunt vnto him that speaketh: $\mathbb{C}$ he that speaketh, shalbe an aleaūt vito me. Euē so ye (for so moch as ye couet spirituall giftes) seke $\frac{t}{y}$ ye maye haue plentye to the edifienge of the congregacion. Wherfore let him that speaketh with tunges, praye, that he maye interprete also. If I praye with tunges, my sprete prayeth, but my vnderstōdinge bryngeth no man frute. How shal it be then? Namely thus: I wil praye with $\dot{y}$ sprete, and wil praye with the vnderstōdinge also: I wil synge psalmes in the sprete, and wil synge psalmes with y vnderstondinge also.

    But whan thou geuest thankes with y sprete, how shal he that occupieth the rowme of the vnlearned, saye $A m \bar{e}$ at thy geuynge of thankes, seynge he knoweth not what thou sayest? Thou geuest well thankes, but the other is not edifyed. I thanke my God, that I speake with tunges more then ye all. Yet had I leuer in the cogregacion to speake fyue wordes with my vaderstondinge y I maye enfourme other also, rather then ten thousande wordes with tunges. $\S$ Brethren be not children in understondinge, howbeit as concerninge maliciousnes be childrē, but in vnderstondinge be parfecte. In the lawe it is wrytten:\| With other tunges and with other lippes wyl I speake vnto this people, and yet shal they not so heare me, sayeth the LORDE. TTherfore are tunges for a token, not to the that beleue, but to them that belene not. Contrary wyse, prophecienge, not to them that belcue not, but to them which belene.

    If the whole cogregacion now came together in to one place, $\pi$ spake all with tunges, and there came in they that are molearned, or they which belene not, shulde they not saye, that ye were out of youre wyttes? But yff all prophecied, and there came in one $\dot{y}$ buleueth not, or one vnlerued, he shulde be rebuked of them all, and iudged of all, and so shulde the secrete of his hert be opened, and so shulde he fall downe tpon his face, worshippinge Gool, and knowleginge, that of a trueth God is in you. How is it then brethren? Whan ye come together, euery one hath a psalme, hath doctryne, hath a tunge, hath a renelacion, hath an interpretacion. Let all be done to edifyenge. If eny mā speake with tunges, let him do it him selfe beynge the seconde, or at the most him selfe beynge ${ }_{\mathrm{y}}$ thirle, and one after another, and let one interprete it. But yf there be not an interpreter, then let him kepe sylence in the congregacion, howbeit let him speake to himselfe and to God. As for the prophetes, let two or thre speake *and let the other iudge. But of eny reuelacion be made vnto another that sytteth, then let the first holde his peace.

    Ye maye all prophecye one after another that they all maye lerne, and that all maye haue comfortc. And the spretes of the prophetes are subiecte unto the prophetes. For God is not a God off discension, †but off peace, like as in all congregacions off the sayntes. $\ddagger$ Let youre wyues kepe sylence in the cogregacion, for it shal not be permytted rnto the to speake, but to be mnder obedience, § as $f$ lawe sayeth also. But yf they wyll lerne eny thinge, let them axe their huszbädes at home. For it becommeth not weme to speake in the congregacion. Or spronge the worde of God from amonge you? Or is it come unto you onely? If eny man thynke himselfe to be a prophet, or spirituall, let him knowe what I wryte vnto you, for they are the commaundementes of the LORDE. But If eny man be ignoraunt, let him be ignoraunt. Wherfore brethren, couet to propheeye, and forlyd not to speake with tunges. Let all thinges be done honestly and in order.

    1 Tim. !.b. 6 Gen. 3. c.

    ## Tye rb. Cyapter.

    IDECLARE vnto you brethren, the ส Gospell that I haue preached vnto you (which ye haue also accepted, and in the which ye stōde, by the which also ye are saued) after what maner I preached it vnto you, yf ye haue kepte it, excepte ye haue belened in vayne. For first of all I delyuered vnto you that which I also receaued, how that Christ dyed for oure synnes acordinge to the scriptures, and that he was buried, and that he rose agayne $\hat{y}$ thirde daye acordinge to the scriptures, and that he was sene of Cephas, then of the twolue: after that was he sene of mo then fyue hundreth brethren at once, wherof there are yet many alyue, but some are fallen aslepe. Afterwarde was he sene of Iames, then of all the Apostles. Last of all was he sene of me also, as of one borne out of due tyme. NFor I am $\frac{\circ}{y}$ leest of the Apostles, which am not worthy to be called an Apostle, 9 because I persecuted the congregacion of God. But by the grace of God I am that I am. And his grace in me hath not bene vayne, but I haue laboured more then they all: howbeit not I but the grace of God which is with me. Now whether it be I or they, thus haue we preached, and thus haue ye beleued.

    But yf Christ be preached, that he is rysen from the deed, how saye then some amoge you, that there is no resurreccion of the deed? If there be no resurreccio of the deed, then is Christ not rysen. If Christ be not rysen, then is oure preachinge in vayne, and youre faith is also in vayne: yee and we are founde false witnesses of God, because we haue testified agaynst God, that he hath raysed vp Christ, whom he hath not raysed vp, yf the deed ryse not agayne. For yf the deed ryse not agayne, the is Christ also not rysen agayne. But yf Christ be not rysen agayne, then is youre faith in vayne, and ye are yet in youre symnes: they also that are fallé a slepe in Christ, are perished. Yf in this life onely we hope on Christ, then are we of all men the most miserable.

    But now is Christ rysen from the deed, and is become  y first frutes of them that slepe. For by one man conmeth death, and by one man the resurreccion of the deed. For as they all dye in Adam, so shal they all be made alyue in Christ, but euery one in his order. The first is Christ, then they that beloge vnto Christ, whan he commeth. Then the ende, whā he shal delyuer vp the kyngdome vnto God the father, whan he shal put downe all rule, and all superiorite, a power. * For he must raygne, tyll he haue put all his enemies vader his fete. The last enemye that shal be destroyed, is death, for he hath put all thinges vnder his fete. But whā he sayeth, that all thinges are put vnder him, it is inanifest that he is excepted, which put all thinges vnder him. Whan all thinges shalbe subrlued vnto him, then shal the sonne himselfe also be subiecte vnto him, which put all thinges mnder him, that God maye be all in all.

    Or els what do they which are baptised ouer $\hat{y}$ deed, yf the deed ryse not at all? Why are they then baptysed ouer the deed? And why stonde we in ioperdy euery houre? By oure reioysinge which I haue in Christ Iesu oure LORDE, I dye daylie. That I haue foughte with beestes at Ephesus after y maner of men, what helpeth it me, yf the deed ryse not agayne? +Let vs eate and drynke, for tomorow we shal dye. Be not ye disceaued. Euell speakinges corruppe good maners. A wake righte vp , and synne not: for some hane not $\dot{\dot{y}}$ knowlege of God. This I saye to youre shame.

    But some man mighte saye: How shal the deed aryse? And with what maner off body shal they come? Thou foole, $\ddagger \frac{t}{y}$ which thou sowest is not quyckened, excepte it dye. And what sowest thou? thou sowest not $\dot{y}$ body that shalbe, but a bare corne, namely of wheate, or of some other. But God geueth it a body as he wil, and vnto euery one of $\dot{y}$ sedes his owne body.
    All fleszhe is not one maner of fleszhe, but there is one maner fleszhe of men, another of beastes, another of fiszhes, another of byrdes. And there are heauenly bodies, and there are earthy bodies: but the heauenly haue one glory, and $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ earthy another. The Sonne hath one clearnes, the Moone hath another clearnesse, and the starres haue another clearnesse, for one starre excelleth another in cleamesse: Euen so the resurreccion of the deed. It is sowne in corrupcion, and shal ryse in vncorrupcion: It is sowne in dishonoure, $\mathbb{C}$ shal ryse in glory: It is sowne in weaknesse, and shal ryse in power: It is sowne a naturall body, © shal ryse a spirituall body.

    If there be a naturall body, there is a spirituall body also. As it is wrytten: §'The first man Adam was made in to a naturall life, and the last Adia in to a spiritual life. Howbeit the spirituall body is not the first, but y naturall, and then the spirituall. The first man is of the earth, earthy: $\mathfrak{y}$ seconde man is frō heauē, heauēly. As the earthy is, soch are they also that are earthy: and as $\dot{y}$ heauenly is, soch are they also ${ }^{t} y$ are heauenly. And as we haue borne the ymage of the earthy, so shal we beare the ymage of the heauenly also. This I saye brethren, that flesh a bloude can not inheret ${ }^{\circ}$ kyngdome of God: nether shal corrupcion inheret meorrupcion.

    Beholde, I saye vnto you a mystery: II We shal not all slepe, but we shal all T be chaunged, and that sodenly and in the twinklynge of an eye, at the tyme of the last trompe. For the trompe shal blowe, and the deed shal ryse vncorruptible, and we shalbe chaunged. For this corruptible must put on vncorrupcion, and this mortall must put on immortalite. But whan this corruptible shal put on vncorrupcion, and this mortall shal put on immortalite, the shal the worde be fulfylled that is wryttē: Death is swalowed vp in victory.  Death, where is thy stynge? Hell, where is thy victory? The stynge of death is synne: The strength of symme is the lawe. But thankes be vnto God, $\dagger$ which hath geue vs the victory thorow oure LORDE lesus Christ. Therfore my deare brethrē, be ye stedfast, vnmoueable, a allwaye riche in the worke of the LORDE, for as moch as ye knowe, that youre laboure is not in vayne in the LORDE.

    CYONCERNYNGE the $\ddagger \ddagger$ gadderynge that is made for the sayntes, as I haue ordeyned in the congregacions of Galacia, euen so do ye also. V pon some Sabbath daye let euery one of you put aside by him selfe, and laye ip what so euer he thinketh mete, that Neuertheles yf it be mete that I go thither also, they shal go with me. * But I wil come rnto you, whan I go thorow Macedonia: for thorow Macedonia wyl I take my iourney. With you peraduēture wil I abyde, or els wynter, that ye maye brynge me on my waye, whither so euer I go.

    I wyl not se you now in my passage, for I hope to abyde a whyle with you, yf the LORDE shal suffre me. + But I wil tary at Ephesus mityll whitsontyde. For a greate and frutefull dore is opened vnto me, and there are many aduersaries. If Timotheus come, se that he be without feare with you, for he worketh $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ worke of the LORDE, as I do. Let no man therfore despyse him, but conuaye him forth in peace, that he maye come vnto me, for 1 loke for him with the brethren.

    PACL an $A$ postle of lesu Christ, by the will of God, and brother Tinotheus. Vito the congregacion of God which is at Corinthn, with all the sayntes which are i all Achaia. * Grace be with you, and peace fro God oure father, and from the LORDE Iesus Christ.

    Blessed be God the father of oure LORDE Iesus Christ, the father of mercy and $\hat{y}$ God of all comforte, which comforteth vs in all oure trouble: in so moch $\mathrm{y}_{\mathrm{y}}^{\mathrm{y}}$ we are able to comforte them that are in eny maner of trouble, with the same comforte wherwith we oure selues are comforted of God. For as the allliceios of Christ are plenteous in vs, euen so is oure cosolacion plenteous by Christ. But whether we haue trouble or comforte, it is done for youre welth. Yf it be trouble, it is done for youre cōforte and health, which health sheweth hir power, in that ye suffre the same affliccions which we suffre. Yf it be comforte, it is done also for youre comforte and health. Therfore is oure hope fast for you, in as moch as we knowe, that, like as ye are partakers of the affliccios, so shal ye be partakers also of the consolacion.

    Brethren we wolde not haue you ignoraunt of oure trouble, ${ }^{\dagger}$ which happened vnto vs in Asia, for we were greued out off measure passynge strength, so that we enen dispared of life, and had concluded in oure selues $\stackrel{t}{y}$ we must nedes dye. But this was done, because we shulde not put oure trust in oure selues, but in God, which rayseth vp the deed to life agayne: which delyuered vs from so greate a death, and yet delyuereth daylie, On whom we trust, that he wil delyuer vs here after also, by the helpe of youre prayer for vs $\ddagger$ that on oure behalfe many thankes maye be genen by many personnes, for the gifte that is geuen vs.

    For oure reioysinge is this, euen the testimony of oure conscience, that in synglenes a godly purenesse, not in fleshlye wyszdome, but in the grace of God, we haue had oure conuersacion in the worlde, but most of all with you. For we wryte nothinge els into you, then that ye rede and also knowe. Yee a I trust that ye shal fynde vs vnto the ende, euen as ye haue founde vs partly.

    For we are youre reioysinge, euē as ye also are oure \& reioysinge in $\dot{y}$ daye of the LORDE lesus. And in this confidence was I mynded the other tyme to come vnto you (that ye mighte haue yet another pleasure more) © to passe by you in to Macedonia, a to come againe out of Macedonia mito you a to be led forth to Iewrye warde of you.

    Whan I thus wyse was mynded, dyd I vse lightnesse? Or are my thoughtes fleshly? Not so \|l but with me yee is yee, and nay is naye. O faithll God, that oure worde moto you hath not bene yee and naye. For Gods sonne Iesus Christ, which was preached amonge you by vs (namely, by me and Siluanus and 'Timotheus) was not yee and naye, but in him it was yee. For all the promyses of God are yee in him, dare Amē in him, to the prayse of God by vs. But it is God which stablysheth vs with you in Christ, and hath anoynted us, ${ }^{b}$ and sealed us, and geuen the ernest of the sprete in oure hertes.

    ${ }^{3}$ BUT I call God to recorde vnto my soule, that to fanoure you ${ }^{\text {a }}$ withall I came not agayne rnto Corinthum. Not that we are * lordes ouer youre faith, but we are helpers of youre ioye, for ye stonde in faith. But I determyned this with my selfe, that I wolde not come agayue to you in heuynes. For yf 1 make you sory, who is it that shal make me glad, but the same which is made sory by me? And the same haue I wrytten vito yon, lest whā I come, I shulde take heuynes of them, of whom 1 oughte to reioyse : for somoch as I haue this confidence in you all, that my ioye is the ioye of you all. For in greate trouble and anguysh of hert wrote I vnto you with many teares: not $\frac{\mathrm{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ ye shulde be sory, but that ye mighte perceaue the loue, which I haue most specially vinto you.

    But yf eny man haue caused sorowe, the same hath not made me sory, but partely, lest I shulde greue you all. It is sufficient, that t the same man is so rebuked of many, so that from hence forth ye oughte the more to forgeue him and to comforte him, lest he be swalowed y p in ouer moch heuynesse. Wherfore I exhorte you, that ye shewe loue vpo him. For therfore dyd I wryte vnto you also, that I mighte knowe the profe of you, whether ye were obediēt in all thinges. But loke vito whō ye forgeue eny thinge, I forgeue hī also. For İ also, yf I forgeue ought vnto eny mā, that forgeve I for youre sakes in the rowme of Christ, lest we shulde be preuented of Sathan. For his thoughtes are not voknowne vnto vs.

    But whà I came to $\ddagger$ Troada to preach $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ Gospell of Christ (and a dore was opened vato me in $y$ LORDE) I had no rest in my spretc, because I founde not Titus my brother: but I toke my leue of them, and wente awaye in to Macedonia. Yet thankes be vuto God, which allwaye geueth vs the victory in Christ, and openeth $\stackrel{y}{y}$ sauoure of his knowlege by vs in enery place. For we are vnto God the good sauoure of Christ, both amonge the ${ }_{y}^{t}$ are saued, ø amonge them $\frac{\mathrm{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ perishe. \| To these, y sauoure of death vnto death : but vnto $\hat{y}$ other, the sauoure of life vnto life. And who is mete therto? For we are not as many are, which choppe a chaunge with the worde of God, but eué out of purenesse, and out of God, in $\mathfrak{y}$ sighte of God, so speake we in Christ.

    ## The iif. Cyapter.

    BEGYNNE we then agayne to prayse oure selues? Or nede we (as some other) of pistles of commèdacion vnto you or letters of commēdacion from you? Ye are oure epistle wrytten in oure hertes: which is vnderstonde and red of all mē, in that ye are knowne, how that ye are $\mathrm{y}_{\mathrm{y}}$ epistle of Christ, mynistred by vs, and wrytte, not with ynke, but with the sprete of the lyuynge God: © not in tables of stone, but in fleshy tables of the hert. Soch trust have we thorow Christ to Gorl warde, not that we are sufficient of oure selues to thynke eny thinge, as of oure selues, ${ }^{+\dagger}$ but oure ablenesse commeth of God, which hath made vs able, to be $\ddagger \ddagger$ mynisters of the new 'Testament: not of the letter, but of the sprete. For the letter kylleth, but the sprete geueth life.

    But yf the mynistracion ${ }^{t}$ kylleth thorow the letter, and was figured in stones, was glorious, \&s so that the childre of Israel mighte not beholde the face of Moses, for $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ clearnesse of his countenaunce, (which glory neuertheles is done awaye) how shal not $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ mynistracion of y sprete be moch more glorious? For yf the office that preacheth dammacion be glorious, moch more doth the office that preacheth righteousnes exceade in glory. For ${ }^{\circ}$ other parte that was glorified is nothinge glorified in respecte of this exceadinge glory. For yf that which is done awaye, be glorious, moch more shal y which remayneth, be glorious.

    Seynge then that we haue soch trust, we vse greate boldnesse, and do not as Moses, IIII which put a vayle before his face, so that $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ children of Israel mighte not se the $9 \%$ ende of it, that is done awaye. But their myndes are blynded.  For vnto this daye remayneth the same coueringe vntake awaye in the olde Testament, whan they rede it, which in Christ is put awaye. But euen moto this daye whan moses is red, the vayle hangeth before their hertes: ${ }^{t+\dagger}$ Neuertheles wha they turne to the LORDE, the vayle shalbe taken awaye.赫For the LORDE is a sprete: © where the sprete of the LORDE is, there is libertye. But uow the glory of $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE apeareth in is all with open face, and we are chaunged in: to the same ymage, from one clearnes to another, cue as of the sprete of the LORDE.

    THERFORE seynge we haue soch an office (euen as mercy is come vpon vs) we faynte not, but cast from vs the clokes of vnhonestye, and walke not in craftines: nether corruppe we the worde of God but open the tructh, and reporte oure selues to euery mans conscyence in the sighte of God.

    If oure Gospell be yet hyd, it is hyd in them that are lost: amonge whom the God of this worlde * hath blynded $\dot{y}$ myndes of them which beleue not, that $\frac{\mathrm{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ lighte of the Gospell of the glory of Christ ( $\dagger$ which is the ymage of God) shulde not shyne vato them.     But this treasure haue we in il earthen vessels, that y power which excelleth might be of God, and not of vs. We are troubled on enery syde, yet are we not without shift. We are in pouertie, but not vtterly without somwhat. We are persecuted, but we are not forsaken. We are oppressed, neuertheles we perish not. We allwayes beare aboute in oure body the dyenge of the LORDE Iesus $\therefore$ the life also of the LORDE Iesus might appeare in oure body.  For we which lyue, are alwayes delyuered ynto death for Iesus sake, that the life also of lesus might appeare in oure mortall flesh.

    Therfore is death now mightie in vs, but life in you. But seynge that we haue the same sprete of faith (acordinge as it is wrytten: tt I beleued, and therfore haue I spoke.) we also beleue, © therfore we speake, for we knowe that he, which raysed vp $\dot{y}$ LORDE levus, shat rayse vs vp also by $\mathfrak{y}$ meanes of Iesus, and shal set vs with you. For all thinges do 1 for youre sakes, $\ddagger$ that the pletoous grace by the thākesgeuynge of many, maye redounde to the prayse of God. Therfore are we not weery, but though oure outwarde man be corrupte, yet the inwarde is renewed daye by daye. For oure trouble, which is but temporall and lighte, worketh an exceadinge and an eternall weighte of glorye vnto vs, which loke not on the thinges that are sene, but on them which are not sene. Amen.

    I maruell $\frac{t}{y}$ ye are so soone turned (from him that called you in the grace of Christ) vnto another Gospell: which is nothinge els, but that there be some, which trouble you, and intende to peruerte the Gospell of Christ.

    Neuertheles though we oure selues, or an angell from heaue preach vnto you eny other Gospel, the $\frac{ \pm}{y}$ which we haue preached vnto you, the same be acursed. As we haue sayde afore, so saye we now agayne: Yf eny mā preach moto you eny other thinge, the y ye haue receaued, ỳ same be acursed. Preach I men now or God? Or go I aboute to please men? Yf I shulde yet please men, I were not the seruaunt of Christ.

    But I certifye you brethren, $\frac{t}{y}$ the Gospell which is preached of me, is not of men. For I nether receaued it ner lerned it of mā, but by the reuelacion of Iesus Christ. For ye haue herde of my conuersacion afore tyme in the Ieweshippe, $\ddagger$ how that beyode measure I persecuted the cōgregacion of God, and spoyled it, and preuayled in the Ieweshippe aboue many of my companyons in my nacion,

    (c) was a moch more feruent manteyner of the tradicions of the fathers.

    But whan it pleased God which separated me fro my mothers wombe, and called me by his grace, for to declare lis sonne in me, that I shulde preach him thorow the Gospell amonge the Heythen, immediatly I commened not of the matter with flesh and bloude: nether came I to Ierusalem vnto them which were Apostles before me: but wente my wayes in to Arabia, and came agayne to Damascon. Then after thre yeare I came to Ierusalē to se Peter, and abode with him fyftene dayes. As for the other Apostles, I sawe none of them, saue Iames the LORDES brother.

    The thinges that I wryte vnto you, beholde, §God knoweth, I lye not. After that wente I in to the coastes of Syria and Celieia: but of face I was vnknowne to $\hat{y}$ Christen congregacions in Iewrye. Neuertheles they had herde onely, that: He that persecuted vs in tyme passed, preacheth now y faith which some tyme he destroyed: and they praysed God in me.

    THEN after fourtene yeares, \|I wente vp agayne to Ierusalē with Barnabas, and toke Titus with me also. But I wente vp by reuclacion, and commened with the of $\dot{y}$ Gospell, which I preach amonge the Heythē: but specially with the which were in reputacion, lest I shulde runne or had runne in vayne. 『But Titus which was also with me, was not compelled to be circūcysed, though he was a Greke: and that because of certayne incommers beynge false brethre, which cane in amoge other, to spye out oure libertye, which we hane in Christ lesus, that they might brynge vs in to bondage: 'To whom we gatue no rowne, no not for the space of an houre, as concernynge to be broughte in to subieccion: $y$ the trueth of the Gospell mighte contynue with you.

    A. for the that semed to be greate, what they were in tyme passed, it maketh no matter to ine. * For God loketh not on the outwarde appearaunce of men. Neuertheles they which semed greate, taught me nothinge: but contrary wrse, whan they sawe that the Gospell ouer the uncircumeision was comytted vato me, as $y$ Gospell ouer $y$ circūcision was commytted vinto I'eter. (For he $\frac{t}{y}$ was mightie with Peter to the Apostleshippe ouer the circumcision, the same was mightie with me also amoge the Heythen) they perceaued the grace that was geuen vnto me.

    Iames and Cephas and Ihon, which semed to be pilers, gaue me and Barnabas y righte handes, and agreed with vs, that we shulde preach amonge the Heythe, and they amonge the Iewes: onely that we shulde remébre the poore, twhich thinge also 1 was diligent to do.

    But whī Peter was come to Antioche, I withstode him in $\hat{y}$ face: for he was worthy to be blamed. For afore there came certayne from Iames, he ate with the Heythe. But whi they were come, he withdrue and separated himselfe, fearinge the which were of the circumcision. And the other lewes dyssembled with him likewyse, in so moch $\dot{y}$ Baruabas was brought in to their symulacion also. But whan I sawe that the? walked not right after $y$ trueth of the Gospell, I sayde vito Peter openly before all: If thou beyinge a lewe, lyuest after the maner of the Gentyles, and not as do the Iewes, why causest thou the Gentyles then to lyue as do the lewes?
    "Hhongh we be lewes by nature, and not symmers of the Gentyles, yet (in so moch as we knowe, that a man is not made righteous by the dedes off the lawe, but by the faith on lems (christ) we hate beleued also on Iesus ('hrist, $t$ we might be made righteous by the faith of Christ, and not by the dedes of the
